Nature's extended face, then sketicks lay,
In this wide field of wonders can you find No art. Blackmore.

With too much knowledge for the sketicks side,
With too much weakness for the stocks pride,
Man hangs between. Pope's Essay on Man.

The

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the skeptick believes nothing.

SKEPTICAL. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the skeptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.

SKEPTICISM. n. f. [skeptikism, French, from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and skepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.

SKETCH. n. f. [schœda, Latin.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,

Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,

So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

To SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts's Logic.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch'd, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting art. Not in use.

Nor have I seen

More that I may call men than you:

How features are abroad I'm skill'd of. Shakespeare.

Jalously what might befall your travel,

Being skill'd in these parts; which to a stranger

Unguided and unfriended, often prove

Rough and unwholesome. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,

Mishapen in the conduct of them both,

Like powder in a skill'd soldier's flask

Is set on fire. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

SKILLET. n. f. [skuellette, French.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dullness

My speculative and offic'd instruments,

Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,

And all indign and base-advertities

Make head against my estimation. Shakespeare's Othello.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire. Mortimer's English.

SKILT. n. f. [A word used by Cleaveland, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

SKINNINESS. n. f. [from skinny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKINNY. adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Least the asperity of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular gristles are not made round; but where the gullet

let touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way. Ray on the Creation.

His fingers meet

In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison's Ovid.

To SKIP. v. n. [squittire, Italian; esquiver, French.] I know not whether it may not come from scapa.

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pass by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. Jer. xlviii. 27.

The queen, bound with love's powerful ft charm,

Sat with Pigwigen arm in arm:

Her merry maids, that thought no harm,

About the room were skipping. Drayton.

At spur or switch no more he skipt,

Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt. Hudibras.

SKR

Send out more horses, skirre the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakesp. Macbeth.
To SKIRRE. v. n. To scour; to feud; to run in haste.
We'll make them skirre away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakesp. Henry V.
SKY'RRER. n. f. [Skirum, Latin.] A plant.
It produces its flowers in an umbel, which consists of several leaves placed circularly, and expanded in form of a rose: the empalement afterward becomes a fruit, composed of two narrow feeds, that are gibbous, and furrowed on one side, but plain on the other. The roots are shaped like long turneps, and are joined to one head. Miller.

Skirts are a sort of roots propagated by feed. Motimer.
SKIRT. n. f. [Skirtie, Swedish.]
1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.
It's but a nightgown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, fide sleeves and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.
As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent. 1 Sa. xv. 27.
2. The edge of any part of the dress.
A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.
3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.
He should seat himself at Athie, upon the skirt of that unquiet country. Spenser on Ireland.

Ye mists, that rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author rise.
Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milt. Parad. Lost.
The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the four great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is the stony and sandy deserts, through which no army can pass. Temple.
Upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies. Dryden.
To SKIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste side. Carew.

Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his office. Dryden.
The waters mounted up into the air: their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun skreened and fence off the heat, otherwise insupportable. Woodward's Natural History.
4. To shelter; to protect.
Ajax interpos'd
His sevenfold shield, and skreen'd Laertes' son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him fore. Philips.
He that travels with them is to skreen them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars. Lact.
His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment. Spitt.
The scales, of which the scarf-skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to skreen the nerves from external injuries. Chayne.

SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; fidegong. It is most used in the adverb skue.
Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise.
To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.
SKULL. n. f. [skiola, Icelandic; skatti, Icelandic, a head.]
1. The bone that incloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contain the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Its figure is round, and a little depressed on its sides. The several pieces, of which the skull is composed, are joined together by sutures, which makes it less apt to break: these pieces or bones are six proper and two common, and each is made up of two tables, or laminae, between which there is a thin and spongy substance, made of some bony fibres, which come from each lamina, called in Greek diaphyse, and in Latin medullarium. In it are a great many veins and arteries, which bring blood for the nourishment of the bones. The tables are hard and solid, because in them the fibres of the bones are close to one another. The diaphyse is soft, because the bony fibres are at a greater distance from one another. The external lamina is smooth, and covered with the pericranium: the internal is likewise smooth; but on it are several furrows, made by the pulse of the arteries of the dura mater, whilst the cranium was soft and yielding. Quincy.

Some lay in dead mens skulls; and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakesp. R. III.
With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains. Dryden.

2. [See SCOLE, a company.] A shoal. See SKULL.
Repair to the river where you have seen them swim in skulls or shoals. Warton.

SKULLCAP. n. f. A headpiece.
SKULLCAP. n. f. [capilla, Latin.] A plant.
The florets are longish, one in each ala of the leaves: the upper leaf is galeated like an helmet, with two auricles adjoining: the under leaf, for the most part, is divided into two: the calyx, having a cover, contains a fruit resembling the head of a slipper or shoe. Miller.

SKY. n. f. [sky, Danish.]
1. The region which furrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.
The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky. Milton.
The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated howlings, fill'd the skies. Rowe.
Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies, Sink, or disperse. Dryden's Æn.

2. The heavens.
The thunderer's bolt you know,
Sky planted, batters all rebelling coasts. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit.
Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
With adamant columns threatens the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather.
Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Shakesp. K. Lear.
SKYEY. adj. [from sky.] Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.
A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skye influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Hourly afflict. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

SKY'COLOUR. n. f. [sky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.
A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver. Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [sky and colour.] Blue; azure; like the sky.
This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water nymphs are dressed in skycoloured garments. Add.

SKY'DYED. adj. [sky and dye.] Coloured like the sky.
There sky'dyed, a purple hue disclose. Pope.

All his joints relax'd;
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milton.

To SLACK. v. n. [from the adjective.]
To SLACKEN. v. n. [from the adjective.]
1. To be remiss; to neglect.
When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord, slack not to pay it. Deutr. xxiii. 21.

SLA

SLA'CKEN. v. n. [from the verb To slack.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts.
SLA'CKLY. adv. [from slack.]
1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.
2. Negligently; remissly.
That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To lose the power of cohesion.
The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it *slack*s and crumbles into fine powder. Mason's Mech. Exer.
3. To abate.
Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton.

To SLACK. v. a.
To SLACKEN. v. a.
1. To loosen; to make less tight.
Ah generous youth, that with forbear;
Slack all thy fails, and fear to come. Dryden.
Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd fails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.
This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or stop, as the them *slack*s or strains. Davies.
Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings. Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.
Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint, which they were used unto, now slack'd, they grow more loose. Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To repite or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton's Paradise Lost.
On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.
My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unbated strength
Of a firm confidence; which shall arm each step Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben. Jonson.
With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milt.

5. To cause to be remitted.
You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.
This doctrine must supercede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's cumberance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do ought may merit praise. Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race. Waller.
One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares, Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour. Dinham.

7. To with-hold; to use less liberally.
He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakespeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.
Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand 'till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mort.

9. To neglect.
Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that the calls servants, or from mine?
—If then they chane'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakespeare, King Lear.
This good chance, that thus much favoureth,
He *slack*s not. Daniel's Civil War.
Slack not the good preface, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.
I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my preference
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms. Addison.

SLACKNESS. n. f. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker.

These thy offices,

So rarely kind, are as interpreters

Of my behind-hand slackness. Shak. Winter's Tale.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place

By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Want of tendency.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp's Surgery.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. *Brerewood.*SLAG. n. f. The dross or recement of metal.

Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with salses to health for to restore,

And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Fa. Queen.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak. H. VI.

She with her cold hand slakes

His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crashaw.

From Julius' head

A lambent flame arose, which gently spread

Around his brows, and on his temples fed: } Dryden.

Amaz'd, with running water we prepare

To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,

And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake. Blackmore's Creation.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chace;

Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addis. Cat.

2. It is used of lime, to that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. *Woodward.*To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.] To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If she the body's nature did partake,

Her strength would with the body's strength decay;

But when the body's strongest sinews slake,

Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. *Davies.*To SLAM. v. a. [from slama, Islandick; schlagen, Dutch.] To slaugh-

To SLANDER. v. a. [from slauderie, French; scandalum, Latin.]

To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander ValentineWith falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. *Shakespeare.*He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Sa. xix. 27.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it. Whitgift.

Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,

By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;

Obtending heav'n for whate'er ill befall,

And putt'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,

But cares not if a thousand are undone. *Dryden.*SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;

When cut-purses come not to throngs, Shak. K. Lear.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,

We think not so;

Yet charge the consul with our harms,

That let him go:

So in our censure of the state

We fill do wander,

And make the careful magistrate

The mark of slander. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

2. Disrepute; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!

Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakespeare. R. III.

SLA

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,

After the slander of most step-mothers,

Ill-eyed unto you. *Shakespeare.*SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another;

one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God; endure not that they should be railers or slanderers, tell-tales or fowers of dissension. *Taylor.*Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer. *Dryden.*SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? Shakespeare.

To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues:

Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,

Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able 'till now to choke the mouth of such detractors, with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

We lay these honours on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads. Shak. Jul. Cæ.

As by flattery a man opens his bottom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends. *South.*SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slanderous.] Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slandrously bark at the courses which are held against that trait-

Improper for a slave. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Thou elvish mark, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wast feed'd in thy nativity

The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakespeare. R. III.

Of guests he makes them slaves

Inhospitably. Milton.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves to wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,

Each might receive a slave into his arms:

This fun perhaps, this morning fun's the last;

That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. *Addis. Spect.*To SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,

The men should slave at cards from morn to night. *Swift.*SLAVER. n. f. [from slava, Latin; slava, Islandick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drive.

Mathiolus hath a passage, that a toad communicates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not consist with truth. Brewin.

Of all mad creatures, if the lean'd are right,

It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. *Pope.*To SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Should I

Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs

That mount the capitol; join gripes with hands

Made hard with hourly fallow as with labour. Shakespeare.

2. To spit.

Miso came with frowning eyes to deliver a slaving good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,

In vain, against the people's fav'rite? *Swift.*To SLAVER. v. a. To smear with spittle.

Twitch'd by the slave he mouths it more and more,

'Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er. *Dryden.*SLAVERER. n. f. [from slaver, Dutch; from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude; the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy in me, yet no man can think it other than the badge and SLEAZY. adj. [often written slazy.] Weak; wanting substance! This seems to be of the same race with slave, or from slay.

SLED. n. f. [slæd, Danish; sléde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

The sleds, the tunbrill, hurdles, and the snail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDDED. adj. [from sled.] Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the slédde Polack on the ice. Shakespeare.

SLEDGE. n. f. [slægs, Saxon; slégia, Icelandic.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him best,

With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron slæges bet. Fairy Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify,

That with his heavy slæge he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it list apply. Spenser.

The uphand slæge is used by under workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head.

Aristotle ascribes it unto the swiftness of that motion; but it would follow that the quick froak of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy, than any softer and more gentle striking of a great slæge. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a slæd. See SLED.

In Lancashire, they use a sort of slæde made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse. Mort.

SLEEK. n. f. [slæch, Dutch.] Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights. Shakespeare.

Envy!

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton

'Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shakespeare.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trim'd,

More sleek'd, more soft, and flacker limb'd. Ben. Jonson.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all drest in flowers,

And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen,
To seek them summer bowers. Drayton.

The purest pasteboard, with a sleek stone rub smooth, and as even as you can. Peacham.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret crest, and sleek enamel'd neck,

Fav'ning
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow slæks.

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp. Milton.

Thy head and hair are sleeks,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take

To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,

Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks,
Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial among your guests to night. Shakespeare.

She does slæch

With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

A sheet of well sleeked marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve,

A little here, nay lo! Milton.

A cruse of fragrance, form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams

Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their blue coats brush'd.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

To SLEEP. v. n. [slæpan, Gothic; slæpan, Saxon; slæpas, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental powers.

I've watch'd and travel'd hard;
Some time I shall slæp out; the rest I'll whistle. Shakespeare.

But those that slæp, and think not on their fins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and thins.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not slæp with his pledge. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Slæp on now, and take your rest; behold, the hour is at hand. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
Peace! the lovers are asleep.

They, sweet turtles! folded lie,
In the last knot that love could tie.

Let them slæp, let them slæp on,
Till this stormy night be gone,

And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,

And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never slæp in night. Crofton.

Those who at any time slæp without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly, bon'd clown in chins of beef ere thou slæp in thy sheath, I beseech jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hob-nails. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

How sweet the moonlight slæps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music

Creep in our ears. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
For'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,

Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,
Till counterbuff'd the stops, and slæps again. Dryden.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We slæp over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it. Atterbury.

4. To be dead; death being a state from which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which slæp in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thess.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only slæps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death. Ascham's Paragon.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slæpt upon This bold, bad man. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

You ever
Have wish'd the slæping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stir'd. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

SLEEP. n. f. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry slæp no more!
Macbeth doth murder slæp; the innocent slæp;

Slæp that knits up the ravell'd slæve of care;
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cold callest the spirits to succour; and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to slæp. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder slæp; and darkness furthereth slæp.

Beasts that slæp in winter, as wild bears, during their slæp wax very fat, though they eat nothing.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading slæp. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings dispos'd the god,

And in his hand the slæp compelling rod. Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in slæp, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it.

SLEEPER. n. f. [from slæp.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.

Sound music; come my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these slæpers be. Shakespeare.

What's the business,

That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The slæpers of the house? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon; the inhabitants say is a plant that slæpeth. There be slæpers know then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a slæper slain. Dryden.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor slæper, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind: every worthy undertaking requires both.

4. A fish. At-fowth.

SLEEPILY. adv. [from slæpy.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dally; lazily.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and slæpily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Ruleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting that he had slæpily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS. n. f. [from slæpy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great slæpiness, and is the most ill boding symptom of a fever. Arbutnot.

SLEEPLESS. adj. [from slæp.] Wanting sleep.

To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
Though after slæpless night. Milton's Paradise Lost.

While penive poets painful vigils keep,
Slæpless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPY. adj. [from slæpy.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these dangers from the place?
They must lie there. Go, carry them and fear.

The slæpy grooms with blood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

She wak'd her slæpy crew. Dryden.

And rising hastily, took a short adieu.

3. Somniferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you slæpy drinks, that your senses unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Let such bethink them, if the slæpy drench
Of that forgetful lake be numb not fill. Milton.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physicians had mingled a slæpy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET. n. f. [perhaps from the Danish, slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind,

Who view, far off, the storm of falling slæts,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryden.

Perpetual slæt and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.

Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congel'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next slæt, then snow, and ice, and frost. Obeyne.

To SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEETLY. adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE. n. f. [slæp, Saxon.]

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my feature,
With slæves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,

Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure. Sidney.

The deep smock slæve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fiction; for in armory, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a slæve, is fashioned much like to that slæve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's slæve upon their arms; sir Launcelot wore the slæve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney. Spenser's Ireland.

Your hose should be ungarter'd, your slæve unbutton'd, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he fo chants to the slæve-band, and the work about the square on't. Shakespeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide slæves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and slæves the same. Dryden.

2. Slæve, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLAVE.]

Methought I heard a voice cry, slæp no more!
Macbeth doth murder slæp; the innocent slæp;

Slæp that knits up the ravell'd slæve of care;
The birth of each day's life. Shakespeare.

3. Slæve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over; which seems to be the sense of slæve in the proverbial phrase, A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguesy in their slæve. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent hypocphant ascribes to them, and in his slæve laughs at them for believing. South's Sermons.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's slæve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [Slæve, Latin.] A fish. At-fowth.

SLEE'VE'D. adj. [from slæve.] Having sleeves.

SLEE'VELESS. adj. [from slæve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

His cloaths were strange, though coarse, and black, tho' bare;

Slæveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet, but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Donne.

Become tuffaffaty.

They put on long slæveless coats of home-spun cotton. Sandys.

Behold you idle by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Grave mummers! slæveless some, and shirteless others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained; Skinner thinks it properly slæveless or slæveless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from slæve, a knot, or slæve, and so signify uncombed, hanging ill together? or from slæve, a cover, and therefore means plainly asford, foolish without palliation?]

This slæveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence. Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a slæveless errand, as she calls it. Spectator.

SLEIGHT. n. f. [slægt, cunning, Icelandic.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice; as sleight of hand; the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy;

Though false Duessa it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;

I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sleights.

As, by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Out slept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.

She could not so convey
The mally substance of that idol great,
What sleight had she the warden to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Fairf.

In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit, and native subtilty
Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he scorns ignoble sleight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

24 H Dreads

SLI

- Dreads he the twanging of the archer's string?
Or flinging stones from the Phœnician slings? Sanders.
Slings have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the slings is farther off from the shoulder-joint, the center of motion. Wilkins.
The Tufcan king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the slings;
Thrice whirld the thong around his head, and threw
The heated lead, half melted as it flew. Dryden's Æn.
Whirl'd from a slings, or from an engine thrown,
Amidst the fœces, as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the beast. Dryden's Ovid.
2. A throw; a stroke.
'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal, at one slings
Of thy victorious arm, well-pleasing son. Milt. Par. Lof.

keep her where she may have good spring-water to drink. Mort.
To SLIP. v. n. [Jlipun, Saxon; slippen, Dutch.]
1. To slide; not to tread firm.
If a man walks over a narrow bridge, when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he fees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution. South.
A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willingly, and makes a seeming stumble, that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity. Dryden.
If after some distinguish'd leap
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior.

first by slitting the ears. Brown's Vagabondage.
Had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below. Hudibras.
We slit the preternatural body open. Wifeman's Surgery.
A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.
If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
He took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
SLIT. n. f. [Jlis, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.
In St James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round

SLO

round house a fit or rift of some little breadth: if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.
Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
Just in that place a narrow fit we make,
Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
Infered thus, the wounded rind we clofe. Dryden.
I found, by looking through a fit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eyes, and held close to it parallel to the prism, I could see the circles much distinct, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.
To SLIVE. v. a. [from the verb.] To split; to divide.
To SLIVER. v. a. [from slip.] To split; to divide.
Liver of blushing Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moons eclipse. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
SLIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] A branch torn off. Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off: as, he took a large sliver of the beef.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clambring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy coronet and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

What said Mr. Dombledon about the fatten for my short cloak and slops? Shakspeare, Henry IV.
SLOPE. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Johnson omits it: Skinner derives it from slap, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in slap, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of inclivity or declivity; forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.
Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a slap rise and fall. Bacon.
Murm'ring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.
SLOPE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.
2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown. Milton.
A carter had laid his wagon fast in a slough. L'Estrange.
2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.
Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to mure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.
When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakspeare.
As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth fling a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckl'd pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
And in his Summer liv'ry rolls along,
Erect and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.
The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticle, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall: the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Grew.
The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the worm or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Grew's Cefnal.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
Th' a body, and went but by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.
To the throne of slow-endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow. Milton.

SLU

This day's death denounc'd, if ought I see,
Will prove no sudden, but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton's Par. Lost.
For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost. Pope.
Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,
Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope.
To SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use.
Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd. Shakspeare.
SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]
1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.
The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.
2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.
The poor remnant of human feed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.
Our fathers bent their baneful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;
But did not France or Holland's fate foresee, Dryden.

 And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky. Pope.
 To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.
 All he did was to deceive good knights,
 And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
 To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
 And end their days with irenownd fame. Fairy Queen.
 He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.
 One went slugging on with a thousand cares. L'Estrange.
SLUGGARD. n. f. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.
 Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
 That you have taken a tardy sluggard here. Shakespeare. R. III.
 Up, up, says avarice; thou nor'st again,
 Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain:
 The tyrant lures no denial takes;
 At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes. Dryden.
 Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
 The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden.
 To SLUGGARDISE. v. a. [from sluggard.] To make idle; to make drowsy.
 Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
 Than, living dully sluggardise'd at home,
 Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. Shakespeare.
SLUGGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.
Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
 Upon a slothful as he chose to ride. Fairy Queen.
 The dull willows, thick as troubled mire,
 Whom neither wind out of their seat could force,
 Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source. Spenser.
 One, bolder than the rest,
 With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast. Waller.
 Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Woodward.
SLUGGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.] Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.
SLUGGISHNESS. n. f. [from sluggish.] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; inertness.
 The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run; which, if they lose, it is thro' their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children. B. Johnson.
 It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct. Locke.
SLUICE. n. f. [sluys, Dutch; sluice, French; sluza, Italian.] A watergate; a floodgate; a vent for water.
 Two other precious drops that ready flood,
 Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
 And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended. Milton.
 Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice,
 Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse. Milton.
 If we receive them all, they were more than seven; if only the natural sluices, they were fewer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 As waters from her sluices, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes:
 And sent her wailings to the skies. Prior.
 To SLUICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.
 Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood. Shakespeare.
 Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake. Milton.
 You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Within those veins for pageants; but let honour
 Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;
 Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
 And let me hunt her through embattl'd foes
 In dusty plains; there will I be the first. Dryden. Span. Tryer.
SLUICE. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.
 And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
 Suck'd by the spongy clouds from off the main:
 The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
 The promis'd crop and golden labours down. Dryden.
 To SLUMBER. v. n. [slumber, Saxon; sluymen, Dutch.]
 1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake nor in profound sleep.
 He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. Pf.
 Conscience wakes despair that slumber'd. Milton.
 2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slumber are often confounded.
 God speaketh, yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed. Job xxxiii. 15.

SLU

SLUMBER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.
 And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
 To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers. Shakespeare. R. III.
 From carelessness it shall fall into slumbers, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; 'till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. South.
 Labour and rest, that equal periods keep;
 Obdient slumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.
 2. Sleep; to repose.
 Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter;
 Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber. Shakespeare. Jul. Cas.
 Love denies
 Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes:
 Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
 And two long days and nights are yet to come. Dryden.
SLUMBEROUS. adj. [from slumber.]
SLUMBERY. adj. [from slumber.]
 1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.
 The timely dew of sleep,
 Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
 Our eyelids. Milton.

 Sleep's gentle pow'r's her drooping eyes invade;
 Minerva, life-like, on embodied air
 Impress'd the form of Iphigenia. Pope's Odyssey.
 There every eye with slumberous chains the bound,
 And daff'd the flowing goblets to the ground. Pope.
 2. Sleepy; not waking.
 A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching; in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
SLUNG. The preterite and participle passive of swing.
SLUNK. The preterite and participle passive of slink.
 Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,
 They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,
 Were slunk. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iv.
 Back to the thicket slunk
 The guilty serpent, and well might; for Eve, Intent now wholly on her taste, nought else Remember'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 To SLUR. v. a. [slur, Dutch, nasty; shore, a slur.]
 1. To slur; to soil; to contaminate.
 2. To pass lightly; to talk; to mis.
 The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph to see the cause of theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument slurred by them, and so their work done to their hands. Cudworth.
 Studious to please the genius of the times,
 With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;
 He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
 And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.
 3. To cheat; to trick.
 What was the publick faith found out for,
 But to slur men of what they fought for? Hudibras.
 Come, sever's the main,
 Cries Ganymede: the usual trick:
 Seven, slur a fix; eleven, a nick. Prior.
SLUR. n. f. [from the verb.] Faint reproach; slight disgrace.

 Her body covered with a light taffeta garment, so cut, as the wrought smock came through it in many places. Shakspeare.
 How do'st thou look now? oh ill-fair'd wench!
 Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court!
 This look of thine will hurt my soul from heav'n. Shakspeare.
 Their apparel was linnen breeches, and over that a smock close girt unto them with a towel. Sandys.
 Though Artemisia talks by fits,
 Of counsels, clafficks, fathers, wits;
 Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke;
 Yet in some things, methinks, she fails,
 'Twere well, if she would pair her nails,
 And wear a cleaner smock. Swift.
 2. Smock is used in a ludicrous kind of composition for any thing relating to women.
 At smock treat n, matron, I believe you;
 And if I were your husband; but when I Trust to your cob-web bosoms any other,
 Let me there die a fly, and feast you, spider. Ben. Johnson.
 Plague on his smock-loyalty!
 I hate to see a brave bold fellow forced,
 Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey by love. Dryden.
SMOCKFACE. adj. [smock and face]. Pal-faced; maidenly.
 Old chiefs reflecting on their former deeds,
 Disdain to rust with batter'd invalids;

 Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
 And smooth'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Addison's Cato.

SMU

2. To suppress.
 Lewd and wicked custom, beginning perhaps at the first amongst few, afterwards spreading into greater multitudes, and so continuing; from time may be of force, even in plain things, to smother the light of natural understanding. Hoskier.
SMOTHER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A state of suppression.
 This unfortunate prince, after a long smother of discontent, and hatred of many of his nobility and people, breaking forth at times into seditions, was at last distressed by them. Bacon.
 A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.
 Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should procure to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother. Bacon's Essays.
 2. Smoke; thick dust.
 Thus must I from the smoke into the smothers,
 From tyrant duke into a tyrant brother. Shakspeare.
 Where yon disorder'd heap of ruin lies,

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.

Come, leave your snatches, and yield me a direct answer.

Shakef. Measure for Measure.
SNA'TCHER. n. f. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the counting snatchers only.
But fear the main intentment of the Scot. Shakef. H. V.
SNA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.] Hastily; with interruption.

To SNEAK. v. n. [Ymcan, Saxon; snige, Danish.]
1. To creep slyly; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes snaking, and so sucks her princely eggs. Shakespeare.
Sneak not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shakespeare.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and snack'd away. Dryden.
I ought not to turn my back, and to snack off in silence, and leave the truth to lie baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He snack'd into the grave,
A monarch's half and half a harlot's slave. Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your music here:
Author, snack off; we'll tickle you, my dear. Moore.

2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, snack to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience. South.
Nothing can support minds drooping and snacking, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South's Sermons.

When interest calls off all her snacking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell. Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will snacks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave. Pope.

SNEAKER. n. f. A large vessel of drink.
I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a snacker of five gallons. Speclator.

SNEAKING. participial adj. [from snack.]
1. Servile; mean; low.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parcimonious.

SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from snacking.] Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not snackingly:
Think the king fees thee still. Hartlet.

While you snackingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

SNEAKUP. n. f. [from snack.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a snackup, and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shak. H. IV.

To SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snit, or of snip, to reprimand. Perhaps snap is in that sense from snit, snitte, Danish.]

Men shulde him snitte bitterly. Chaucer.]

1. To reprimand; to check.

2. To nip.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No snapping winds at home. Shakespeare.

SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this snapping without reply: you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness: if a man will counsell and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

To SNEB. v. a. [Properly to snit. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold,
And snibbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.]

To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort.]

1. To show contempt by looks: viso suspensere aduice.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a snearing way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little snere'd at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those snearing or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with guineas.

I have not been snearing fullsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they snere'd at every word spoken by each other. Tatler.

SNI

SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the snier of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all agen. Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.

Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one nor the majesty of the other could secure them from a snier. Watts.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [Ymcan, Saxon; niezen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes 'till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bacon.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and no-strils, with frequent sneezing. Wijeman's Surgery.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.

If any thing oppres the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray on the Creation.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce head-ach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Gulliver's Travels.

SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack
As earth and sky would mingle; but These flaws, though mortals fear them
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone. Milt. Par. Rep.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there past exclamations successively through the city. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SNEEZEWORD. n. f. [parmica, Latin.] A plant.

It hath radiated flowers, whose disk consists of many florets;
but the borders are composed of half florets: the embryos are lodged in the flowercup, which is scaly, each of which becomes one slender seed. Miller.

SNEET. n. f. [Among hunters.] The fat of a deer.

SNEW. The old pretense of To snow.

To SNIB. v. a. [snitte, Danish. See SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Hulkeid's Tale.

SNICK and SNEE. n. f. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his side, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wijeman's Surgery.

To SNICKER, or SNIGGER. v. n. To laugh slyly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Ditt.

To SNIFF. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up
the nose.

So then you look'd scornful, and sniff at the dean.

As, who should say, now am I skinny and lean? Swift.

To SNIFFLE. v. n.

Sniffing is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Watson's Angler.

To SNIP. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissors.

The sinus should be laid open, which was snit up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised lips dressed. Wijeman's Surgery.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissors for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbuthnot.

Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

1. A single cut with scissors.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and snit and snath. Shakespeare.

Like to a censor in a barber's shop.
The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open;
therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Hoffe.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emphasis.
hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wijeman's Surgery.

SNIPE. n. f. [sneppe, German; snite, Saxon; snit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evident causes of the atrabilis are a high sermenting diet; as old cheefe, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Fieger.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakespeare. Othello.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.

SNIPEET. n. f. [from snip.] A small part; a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snipets;
Or from the pillory tips of ears. Hudibras.

SNIPEAP. n. f. [A cant word formed by reduplication of snip.]
Tart dialogue.

Dennis and dissonance, and capacious art,
And snip and snip short, and interruption smart. Pope's Dunciad.

SNIPE. n. f. [Ymcan, Saxon.] A snipe. This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornvall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snipe, and wood-dove. Cervau.

To SNITE. v. a. [Ymcan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze;
in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew's Cofmol.

SNIVEL. n. f. [snivel, snivel, German.] Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves sniveling or fingling, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he sniveling and yelping, that he had dropt his ax into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamentor.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivelers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreasonably blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Johof.

Whole railing heroes, and whole wounded gods,
Makes some suspect he snores as well as nods. Ro'manion.

He may lie quietly in his shades, and snore on to doomsday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may discern
The monsters of the deep. Dryden's Albion.

'Twas Acme's and Septimius' life;
The lady sigh'd, the lover snor'd. Prior.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd. Addison.

SNORE. n. f. [Ymcan, Saxon; from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

He furetted grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their possits.

Shakespeare's Macheth.
To SNORP. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To blow through the nose as a high metted horse.

The snoring of his horses was heard. Jer. viii. 16.

SKO'WBALL. n. f. [snow and ball.] A round lump of con-gelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryden.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snow- ball, I call qualities; and as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNOWBROTH. n. f. [snow and brath.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shakespeare.

SNOWDROP. n. f. [snaritzellucian, Latin.] An early flower.

The flower is, for the most part, composed of six leaves, in form of a lily, which are sometimes equal, and sometimes unequal and pendulous: the empalement becomes a roundish fruit, which is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds: to which may be added, it hath a bulbous root. Miller.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of Winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle on Colours.

The little shape, by magic pow'r,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickell.

SNOW-WHITE. adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden's En.

SNOWY. adj. [from snow.]

1. White like snow.

So flows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows flows. Shakespeare.

Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy headed Winter leads;
Spring and Summer next succeeds;
Yellow Autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast,
Render'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton's Par. Lost.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Astracan, over the snowy plains, Retires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snuff in quiet; now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares.

Herbert.

SNUFF. n. f. [snuff, Dutch, snot.]

1. Snot. In this sense it is not used.
2. The useless excrement of a candle: whence maucher la chandelle.

My great affliction,
If I could bear longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your opposite wills,
My snuff and loaded part of nature should Burn itself out.

Shaksp. King Lear.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough;

Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff.

Donne.

The snuff-dishes shall be of pure gold.

Ex. xxv. 38.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Will.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I th' dungeon by a snuff.

Shaksp. Cymbeline.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.
A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour.

Addison on Italy.

5. Repentment expressed by snuffing; perverse repentment.
What hath been seen
Either in snuff or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne Against the old kind king.

Shaksp. King Lear.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again.

L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to ev'ry atom just
The pungent grains of titillating dust.

Pope.

TO SNUFF. v. a. [snuff, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.
A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air against rain.

Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars and promises a more successful fight.

Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear.

Dryden's Æn.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert.

Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brack-denstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in.

Swift.

2. To scent.
The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind.

Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves.

Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame fling true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues.

Tickell.

3. To crop the candle.
The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes.

Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be better dressed, and our lights snuffed, and our religion more active.

Taylor's worthy Communicant.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire.

Swift.

TO SNUFF. v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack, they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent.

Dryden's Æn.

SO

Says Humpus, sir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes.

King.

2. To snift in contempt.
Ye said, what a weariness it is, and ye have snuff'd at it.

Mal. ii. 12.

SNUFFBOX. n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails.

Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane.

Pope.

SNUFFERS. n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.
Swift's Direction to the Butler.

TO SNUFFLE. v. n. [snuffeln, Dutch.] To speak through the nose; to breath hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdainful that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could cspy the duck's getting up again.

Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air in pockets flut,
Sound filthier than from the gut.

Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who sniffed and snuffed, and considered on't.

L'Estrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme;
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat.

Dryden.

TO SNUG. v. n. [snigen, Dutch.] To lie close; to snudge.
There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be thent.

Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber.

L'Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience.
They spy'd a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind.

Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.
At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what critics say.

Swift.

3. Shilly or indifferently close.
Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?

Dryden.

TO SNUGGE. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.
So. adv. [1735, Saxon; so, Dutch; so, German.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

At whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay.

Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valombrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn Abject and lost lay these.

Milton.

Tir'd at first fight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky.

Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place.

Pope.

2. To such a degree.
Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight
Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance That still defies new states t' advance.

Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie;
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye?

Waller.

In viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed.

Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are.

Addison's Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wife we're grown:
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.

Pope.

3. In

SO

3. In such a manner.
4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown.

Milton.

There's no such thing, as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new.

Suckling.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so excellent a fruit will not grow here.

Temple.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so.

I shall minutely tell him the fiers by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice.

Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent.

Addison.

5. In the same manner.
Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not.

Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too.

Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being.

Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.
Not far from them the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there.

Dryden.

Does this deserve to be rewarded so?

Dryden.

Did you come here a stranger or a foe?

Dryden.

It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters whether they be so or not.

Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature.

Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain.

Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution, by some more unaccountable way, this is certain that so it is.

Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.
The gods, though led, yet was constrain'd to obey;
For longer time than that, no living wight,
Below the earth, might suffer'd to stay:

Fairy Queen.

So back again him brought to living light.

Fairy Queen.

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion.

Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: answered by an.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;
As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought.

Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moist'ne yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field.

Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; modo.
Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unapproved, and leave
No spot or blame behind.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked.

Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart.

Rowe.

A partner there; I will give up mankind.

Rowe.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another, answering to as.

At a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it.

Swift.

SOA

11. It sometimes answers to the word or sentence going before, and returns the sense.
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know.

Denham.

Angling is something like poetry, men are to be born so.

Walter's Angler.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so.

Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;

Dryden.

For having once been guilty, well they know
To a revenged prince they still are so.

Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so.

Dryden.

I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens.

Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in that noble language peculiar to that great poet.

Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.

Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so.

Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago.

Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the case.
How sorrow shakes him!

Dryden.

So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it laid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you.

Shakespeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning. Well.
O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? who was your speaker, Madam?

Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

15. It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or furd comparison.
An affronting is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary.

Aronson.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.
There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so;
if not, let him kill the next Percy himself.

Shakespeare.

I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince.

Shakespeare.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.

Shakespeare.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his prose is full as good.

Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:

Shakespeare's Othello.

So so; it works: now mistress, fit you fast.

Dryden.

20. So so. [so, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.
He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so; and yet 'tis well.

Shakespeare.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so writers, I may call them so, are continually founding in our ears.

Folton on the Classics.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.
So then the Volscians stand; but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound variety of designs.

Bacon's War with Spain.

TO SOAK. v. n.

SOB

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
Their land shall be soak'd with blood. Ibid.
There deep Galeus soaks the yellow sands. Dryden.
Thou whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure
'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to shun
To bask thy naked body in the sun;
Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term.
- Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.
A greater sorer than a fever; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his force, and his garrisons, and his feattings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Newton.

SOAP. n. f. [sapo, Saxon; sapo, Latin.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap. Malachi.
A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton's Opticks.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodw.
Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or four lands. Mortimer.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-tee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. f. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler condescends with me on the duties on cattle-soap. Addison's Spectator.

To SOAR. v. n. [soare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings.

Feather'd foon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

'Tis but a base, ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakespeare.
How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakespeare.

Valour soars above
What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soars. Milton.

Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dryden.

When fivallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. f. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Within soar
Of towering eagles, to all the fowls he seems A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB. v. n. [soob, geab, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopoeia copied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakespeare.

As if her life and death lay on his faying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Fairfax.

She sigh'd, she sobb'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and the tore her hair. Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desires, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education.

He sobbing fees
The glades, mid-opening to the golden day. Thomson.

Sob. n. f. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break heart, or choke with sobbings his hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sobbings, loud scream, and shriller squall. Swift.

SOB

A wondrous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs;
Sighs, sobbings, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope.

To SOB. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SOBER. adj. [sobrius, Latin; sobre, French.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquours; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Common Prayer.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor's Holy Communion.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and foolishness of his neighbour. South's Sermon.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double, as much as if he had done the same being sober. Hobbes.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raving mad: there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober-blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakespeare.

Cicero travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot's Description of the World.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Tit. ii. 6.
The governor of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Heyward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to with for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio shall Offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakespeare.

Come, civil night,
Thou sober-faced matron, all in black. Shakespeare.

Twilight grey
Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.

What parts gay France from sober Spain,
A little rising rocky chain:
Of men born south or north th' hill,
Those seldom move; these ne'er stand still. Prior.

Swift and he despis'd the face of state,
The sober follies of the wife and great. Pope.

See her sober over a famper, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SOBER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober.

A little learning is a dang'rous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

SOBERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.

2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers. Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

SOBERNESS. n. f. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyrical preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have thrown him the difference. Dryden's Dunciad.

SOBERETY. n. f. [from sobrietas, French; sobrietas, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; sobriety.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.

2. Pleasant freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister, more than that he

which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and society in diet. Hobbes.

Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and society to give up their religion. Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

We will enquire with all society and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature, any such transmission of immaterial virtues and what the force of imagination is.

Society in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and stupid old infancy? Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and society of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

Mirth makes them not mad;

Not society sad. Denham.

SOCCAGE. n. f. [soc, French, a ploughshare; socagium, barbarous Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandry services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, or socage; to that whatever is not knight's service, is socage. This socage is of three kinds; a socage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Socage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Socage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt; and such socmen hold not by certain service. Cowel.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCIABLE. adj. [sociable, French; sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conversed.

Another law toucheth them as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hobbes.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild, and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison's Cat.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Them thus employ'd, beheld
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit, that deign'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age. Wotton.

SOCIABLENESS. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane. Dryden.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship well lik'd by many. Haywood.

SOCIALLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; not sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide;
But solemn and sublime. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SOCIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to a general or public interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.

Withers adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Confiding in union or converse with another.

'Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thy self accompan'd, seek't not Social communication. Milton.

SOCIALLY. [from socially.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. f. [societas, French; societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

Numbers united in one interest, community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and public societies. Tillotson.

2. Company; converse.

To make society
The sweetest welcome, we will keep ourself Till supper-time alone. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

SOD

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my wrother state,
Shunn'd my abhor'd society. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Solitude sometimes is best society.

And short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can fort? Milton.
Heav'n's greatness no society can bear;
Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

SOCK. n. f. [soccus, Latin; soce, Saxon; soete, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well trod stage anon,
If Johnson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here;
Nor greater Johnson dares in socks appear;
But gentle Sinkin just reception finds Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds. Dryden.

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison.

SOCKET. n. f. [souchette, French.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons set in watches stead,
Therein gave light, and flam'd continually;
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairy Queen.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve. Hudibras.

The mighty virgin fees
When sparkling lamps their spitt'ring light advance,
And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the fight,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

I two dire comets
In their own plague, and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
Berest of sleep he loths his meat and drink;
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man. Dryden.

Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured; as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Wise.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and relinency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins.

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining share. Dryden.

SOCKETCHISEL. n. f.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their thunk made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket. Moxon.

Spirits can either fix assume; to soft

And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of soft and fervile tempers as disposed them to soft fudden acting and compliance. K. Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he had done famously, he did it to that end; tho' soft confounded men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

However soft within themselves they are, Dryden.

To you they will be valiant by despair.

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow;

That tends to make one worthy man my foe;

Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,

Or from the soft cy'd virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint like Edward's;

Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shakespeare.

Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay,

His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess

Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim

In asking their good loves. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even,

She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There soft-extended, to the murmuring sound

Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.

'Tis sense is also mistress of an art

Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;

Though this dear art doth little good impart,

Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Notes on the Odyssey.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft.

Gentle and low, an excellent thing in women. Shakespeare.

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and gracious monarch dies,

Soft whisp'ers first, and mournful murmurs rise

Among the sad attendants; then the found

Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,

His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays.

Soft were my numbers, who could take offence,

When smooth description held the place of sense. Pope.

Hark, the numbers soft and clear

Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Soft sleep with soft slumb'rous weight.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not to fast.

Proclaim my brother. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

Oh, come in Emilia;

Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakespeare.

But soft, my muse, the world is wide,

And all at once was not desir'd. Suckling.

To SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,

And founding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To temperate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts.

Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Adelphi.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire,

Bid her be all that cheers or softens life,

The tender filter, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

Musick can soften pain to ease,

And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh.

He bore his great commission in his look,

But twenty temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

To SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften; as iron in the forge. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;

The silence often of pure innocence

Permeates, when speaking fails. Shakespeare.

SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Ahab rent his cloaths, and went softly. 1 Kings xxi. 27.

In this dark silence softly leave the town,

And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me,

And lay me softly in my native dust,

To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.

She with a wreath of myrtle crowns the head,

And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden's Ænide.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;

Though pity softly plead within my soul,

Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners, and expedient-mongers, shake their heads

so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft.

2. Quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon's Natural History.

SOI

3. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or sofness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts's Logic.

4. Civility; gentleness.

Improve these virtues, with a sofness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

5. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, sofness, and effeminacy are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the sofness of the court. Clarend.

6. Timoroufness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or sofness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon's Henry VII.

A filthy man in simple weeds forlorn,

And soiled with dust of the long dried way. Fairy Queen.

Although some heretics have abused this text, yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon's Holy War.

If I soil

Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,

With the rank vapours of this in-worm mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,

Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,

Of innocence, of faith, of purity,

Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One who cou'd n't for a taste o' th' flesh come in,

Licks the soil'd earth, Tate.

While seeking with a mangled Ombi's blood.

If the eye-glaze be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glaze be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they fought to soil.

An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

SOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways

I met this crown; and I myself know well

How troublesome it fate upon my head:

To thee it shall descend with better quiet;

For all the toil of the achievement goes

With me into the earth. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

That would be a great soil in the new glofs of your marriage. Shakespeare.

Vexed I am with passions,

Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakespeare.

I would have the soil of her fair rape

Wip'd off. Shakespeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,

Which, nice as crimes, will not bear a soil. Dryden.

I will only be bold with Benediſt for his company; for from the crown of his head to the ſole of his foot he is all mirth. Shakeſp. Much Ado about Nothing.

Tickling is moſt in the ſoles of the feet: the cauſe is the rareneſs of being touch'd there. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

The ſols of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the ſtomach; as going wet-foot, to thoſe that uſe it not, affecteth both. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Such reſting found the ſole of unbleſt feet. Milton.
In the make of the camel's foot, the ſole is flat and broad, being very fleſhy, and covered only with a thick, ſoft, and ſomewhat callous ſkin; but very fit to travel in ſandy places.
Ray on the Creation.

2. The foot.
To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Haſt wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceaſeſt not thy weary ſoles to lead. Fairy Queen.

3. The bottom of the ſhoe.
Nay, gentle Romeo, we muſt have you dance.
—Not I, believe me: you have dancing ſhoes, With nimble ſoles. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A trade that, I hope, I may uſe with a ſafe conſcience;
which is, indeed, firſt, a mender of bad ſoles. Milton.

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.—Nor the ſole

2. It is taken of itself commonly for the Summer solstice.

The sun, ascending unto the northern signs, legetteth first a temperate heat in the air, which by his approach unto the solstice he intendeth, and by continuation increaseth the same even upon declination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Let the plowmen's prayer

Be for moist solstices, and Winters fair. May's Virgil.

SOLSTICIAL. adj. [solstitial, French; from solstice.]

1. Belonging to the solstice.

Observing the dog-days ten days before and after the equinoctial and solstitial points, by this observation alone, are exempted a hundred days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Happening at the solstice.

From the North to call

Decrepid Winter; from the South to bring Solstitial Summer's heat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fields labour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed

His wonted showers, and Sirius parch'd with heat

Solstitial the green herbs. Philips.

SOLUBLE. adj. [from solvo.] Possible to be cleared by reason or inquiry.

Intellective memory I call an act of the intellective faculty, because it is wrought by it, though I do not inquire how or where, because it is not soluble. Hale's Origin of Manhood.

2. Able to pay debts contracted.

SOLVING-GOOSE. n. f. A fowl.

A solving-goose is in bigness and feather very like a tame goose, but his bill longer, and somewhat pointed; his wings also much longer, being two yards over. Grew.

A Scot, when from the gallow-tree let loose,

Drops into Styx, and turns a solving-goose. Cleveland.

SOLUTION. n. f. [solutio, French; solutio, Latin.]

1. Dissolution; breach; disjunction; separation.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitation of solution of continuity. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. Matter dissolved; that which contains any thing dissolved.

Aretæus, to procure sleep, recommends a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot on Coins.

When salt of Tartar per deliquium, poured into the solution of any metal, precipitates the metal, and makes it fall down to the bottom of the liquor in the form of mud, does not this argue that the acid particles are attracted more strongly by the salt of tartar than by the metal, and by the stronger attraction go from the metal to the salt of tartar?

3. Resolution of a doubt; removal of an intellectual difficulty.

Something yet of doubt remains,

Which only thy solution can resolve. Milton's Parad. Lost.

They give the reins to wand'ring thoughts,

'Till by their own perplexities involv'd

They ravel more, still less resolv'd

But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton's Agonistes.

SOM

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear;

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts. Dryden.

SOMETIME. adv. [some and time.] Once; formerly.

What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form,
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometime march? Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France. Sh.

SOMETIMES. adv. [some and times.]

1. Not never; now and then; at one time or other.

'Twill render me more equal, sometime superior. Milton.

It is good that we sometimes be contradicted, and that we always bear it well; for perfect peace cannot be had in this world. Taylor.

2. At one time, opposed to sometimes, or to another time.

The body passive is better wrought upon at sometimes than at others. Bacon's Natural History.

Sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, may be glanced upon in these scripture descriptions. Burnet.

He writes not always of a piece, but sometimes mixes trivial things with those of greater moment: sometimes also, though not often, he runs riot, and knows not when he has said enough. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

SOMETHING. n. f. [some and what.]

1. Something; not nothing, though it be uncertain what.

Upon the sea somewhat methought did rise
Like blueish mists. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, on purpose to avoid the light of somewhat that displaces him, would, for the same reason, shut them against the sun. Atterbury.

2. More or less.

Concerning every of these, somewhat Christ hath commanded, which must be kept till the world's end: on the contrary side, in every of them somewhat there may be added, as the church judges it expedient. Hosker.

These facts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixt with a smatch of virgolic. Grev.

3. Part greater or less.

Somewhat of his good sense will suffer in this transfusion, and much of the beauty of his thoughts will be lost. Dryden.

SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hic-cough. Bacon's Natural History.

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole; yet these imperfections hinder not our compassion. Dryden.

SOMETHING. adv. [some and where.] In one place or other; not nowhere.

Hopeless and forelorn
They are return'd, and somewhere live obscurely. Denham.

Compressing two prisons hard together, that their sides, which by chance were a very little convex, might somewhere touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been one continued piece of glass. Newton's Opt.

Does something still, and somewhere yet remain, Reward or punishment? Prior.

Of the dead we must speak gently; and therefore, as Mr. Dryden says somewhere, peace be to its names. Pope.

SOMETHING. n. f. [some and while.] Once; for a time. Out of use.

Though under colour of the shepherds' somewhere,
There crept in wolves full of fraud and guile,
That often devoured their own sheep,
And often the shepherd that did 'em keep. Spenser's Past.

SON

SOMNIFEROUS. adj. [somniafero, Fr. somniafer, Latin.] Causing sleep; procuring sleep; soporiferous; dormitive.

I wish for some somniaferous potion, that might force me to sleep away the intermitted time, as it does with men in fur-row. Walter's Angler.

SOMNIFICK. adj. [somnia and facio, Latin.] Causing sleep.

SOMNOLENCY. n. f. [somnialescia, Latin.] Sleepiness; inclination to sleep.

SON. n. f. [sunus, Gothick; suna, Saxon; son, German; son, Swedish; sone, Dutch; syn, Slavonian.]

The lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning grey. Dryden.

6. An old song. A trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song. Mor.

A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was forced by a cobbler to resign all for an old song. Addison.

SONGISH. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. Dryden.

SONGSTER. n. f. [from song.] A singer. Used of human singers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the Spring with their various notes did seem to welcome him as he pass'd. Howel.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estr.

Either songster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes. Dryden.

SONGSTER.

SOO

SOMNIFEROUS. n. f. [from song.] A female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night,
The sober-sung sonnetter trills her lay. Thompson's Summer.

SONNET. n. f. [sonnet, French; sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language, and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and file;
The subject new: it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on:
Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on A tide-page is this! and fume in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, firs, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Macdonnell, or Galasp?
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp:
Thy age like ours, soul of fir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To fort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shakespeare.

SONNETTER. n. f. [sonnetter, French; from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Admit me, I me extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetter. Shakespeare. Love's Labour's Lost.

He first thinks fit no sonnetter advance
His censure farther than the song or dance. Dryden.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetters in this art.

What wouldst fluff this madrigal would be,
In some star'd hackney sonnetter or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

SONNETTER. adj. [sonus and ser, Latin.] Giving or bringing found.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONNETTER. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing found.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and soniferous quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts's Logic.

SONOROUS. adj. [sonore, French; sonorus, Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill found. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host of fens
A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. High sounding; magnificent of found.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison on Italy.

SONOROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high found; with magnificence of found.

SONOROUSNESS. n. f. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving found.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, that in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Bayle.

2. Magnificence of found.

SON. adv. [sunus, Gothick; suna, Saxon; son, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their gen'ral's voice they son obey'd. Milton.

You must obey me, son or late;

Why should you vainly struggle with your fate?
Early: before any time supposed: opposed to late. Dryden.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too son,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sonner. Ham. xiii.

How is it that you are come so son to-day? Ex. ii. 18.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sonner. Bacon's Nat. History.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is toll'd up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison's Guardian.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentiously or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preferred Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a son and prosperous issue. Sidney.

SOO

5. SOON. adv. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Ex. xxxii. 19.

Not was his virtue poison'd, soon as born, Dryden.

With the too early thoughts of being king.

SOONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A mafon meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SOOPHERRY. n. f. [sophrus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a flower, which for the most part is composed of four leaves, expanding in form of a rose; from whose four-leaved emblement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a spherical fruit, inclosing a nut of the same form. Miller.

SOOT. n. f. [soot, Saxon; soot, Islandick; soot, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howel.

Of they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constringing; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again. Dryd. Cleomenes.

SOOTED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SOOTERKIN. n. f. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to-bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkin. Swift.

SOOTH. n. f. [sooth, Saxon.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
Th' youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed. Shakespeare.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth. Shakespeare. Richard II.

He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none,
It doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden's Rem.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distressed. Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [sooth, Saxon.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

To SOOTH. v. a. [gerodian, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothings them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakespeare.

Can I sooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne?
By his fair daughter is the chief confid'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope's Odyssey.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothings? Rowe.

I've try'd the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison. Cato.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dry.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SOOTHER. n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothers. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

To SOOTHERLY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. Acts xvi.

SOOTHERLY.

SOP

SOOTHSAVER. n. f. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarce was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ideo of March. Shaksp.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

SOOTINESS. n. f. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOOTY. adj. [from soot.]

1. Breeding foot.

By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Confining of foot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way so to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop Under the sooty flag of Acheron;

Harpies and hydras and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,

And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

SOP. n. f. [rop, Saxon; sepa, Spanish; sepe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor to be eaten.

The bounded waters

Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,

And make a sep of all this solid globe. Shakspere.

Draw, you rogue, for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sep o'th' moonshine of you. Shakspere.

Seps in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon's Natural History.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd

A sep, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard,

Which mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before

His greedy grinning jaws, just ope'd to roar. Dryden.

Ill nature is not to be cured with a sep; but quarrellome men, as well as quarrellome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sep given to Cerberus.

To Cerberus they give a sep,

His tripple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

To Sop. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SORE. n. f. [See SOAP.]

SORN. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sorbs, and three pert templars came,

The fame their talents, and their tastes the same;

Each prompt to query, answer and debate,

And smit with love of poesy and prate. Pope's Dunciad.

SORTH. n. f. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar

That slew the sorth and a Persian prince. Shakspere.

A sg for the sultan and sophi.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophisma, Latin.] A fallacious argument; an unfounded subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true

one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Crotus is said to have been much resorted by the sophists of Greece in the happy beginning of his reign. Tem.

SOPHISTER. n. f. [from sophiste, French; sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakspere's Hen. VI.

If a heathen philosopher bring arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk, nor live, as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of Christians. Rogers's Sermons.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist. This sense is antiquated.

Aldimus the sophister hath many arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [from sophistic, Fr. from sophista.] Fallaci-ously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this fabulous world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a more sophistical knot. Mere.

SOR

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

To SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [from sophist, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophist

the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarcely any probable shew appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are *sophist*ed. Shakspere.

Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with *sophist*ed ones. Pope.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who *sophist*ed nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elusive acts of man's will. Saunders's Sermons.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare;

They purchase but *sophist*ed ware:

'Tis prodigality that buys deceit. Dryden.

Where both the giver and the taker cheat.

The eye hath its costs and humours transparent and colourless, left it should tinge and *sophist*icate the light that lies in by a natural jaundice. Beattie.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and super-scription of truth; the only way to know what is *sophist*icate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glavinelli.

So truth, when only one supply'd the state,

Grew scarce and dear, and yet *sophist*icate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophist, Fr. from sophist.] An adulterator; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Shaksp.

The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Eyle.

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasoners. Quar.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophist.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.] Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Shaksp.

These men have obscured and confounded the nature of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; tho'

an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

To SOPHIST. v. n. [from sophist, Latin.] To lay asleep. Shaksp.

SOPHISTEROUS. adj. [from sophist and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous;

anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and sophisterous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleep. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that sophisterous medicine infused into my liquor. Gulliver's Travels.

SOPHISTEROUSNESS. n. f. [from sophisterous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPHISTICK. adj. [from sophist and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate;

narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its sophist

or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from soph.] One that sleeps any thing in liquor.

SOPHIST. adj. [from sophist, Latin.] That may be drunk or slipped.

SOPHISTION. n. f. [from sophist, Latin.] The act of drinking or slipping.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophist, Latin.] The berries of the forb or service-tree.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophist, French; sophistarius, low Latin.] A conjuror; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage,

As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,

Drug-working sophisters that change the mind,

Soul-killing witches that deform the body,

And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspere.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sophister to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw a fable force arise,

All sudden gorgon's hiss and dragon's glare, Pope.

And ten horn'd fiends.

The Egyptian *force*ers contended with Moses, but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God, Psalmist's Lament.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophist, Latin.] A female magician;

an enchantress.

Bring forth that *force*er, condemn'd to burn. Shaksp.

Divers witches and *force*ers have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky *force*ers that fat

Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,

Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the *force*ers displays

Her own transgressions, to upbraid me, mine. Milton.

SOPHIST. n. f. Magic; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax,

For mischiefs manifold, and *force*ers terrible,

Was banish'd. Shakspere.

Adders wisdom I have learn'd

To fence my ear against thy *force*ries. Milton.

Acteon has long tracks of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of *force*ry. Tatler.

SORD. n. f. [from sordid.] Turf; grassy ground.

This is the prettiest low-born lair that ever ran on the green sord. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

An altar of grassy sord. Milton.

SORDID. n. f. [Latin.] Foulness; dregs.

The sea washes off the sord and sordes wherein mineral molfies were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous. Woodward.

SORDID. n. f. [from sordid, French; sordina, Italian.] A small sordid. } pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet to make it found lower or shriller. Bailey.

SORDID. adj. [from sordid, Latin.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

There Charon stands

A sordid god, down from his hoary chin

A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [from sordid, French.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

It is strange since the priests office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid. South's Sermons.

3. [from sordid, French.] Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,

And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SORDIDLY. adv. [from sordid.] Meanly; poorly; covetously;

SORDIDNESS. n. f. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madneses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from slothfulness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Roy.

SORE. n. f. [Saxon; sor, Danish.] A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued or from internal cause: to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen.

Let us hence provide

A salve for any sore that

SOR

SOROCIDE. n. f. [soror and cedo.] The murder of a sister.
SORRAGE. n. f. The blades of green wheat or barley. DiG.
SORRANCE. n. f. [In fattery.] Any disease or sore in horses. DiG.

SORREL. n. f. [rube, Saxon; foral, French.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Milner.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the purest bilious alkali. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SORRILY. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitifully.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help though I sing sorri. Sidney.
SORRINESS. n. f. [from sorry.] Meanness; wretchedness; pitiableness; despicableness.

SORROW. n. f. [sorg, Danish.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you;
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.
A world of woe and sorrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But having you, can show no sorrow now. Dryden.

To SORROW. v. n. [saurgan, Gothick; rongan, Sax.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
Lament, nor sorrow at. Shakespeare.

Where-ever sorrow is relief would be,
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakespeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye forsook to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayward.

Sad the prince explores
The neighbouring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

SORROWED. adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow.
Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom Play the recanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender. Shakespeare.

SORROWFUL. adj. [sorrow and full.]
1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.
Blessed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy scourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.
Hannah said, no, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Sam.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.
The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrowful meat. Job. vi. 7.

SORRY. adj. [sawz, Saxon.]
1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of flight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.
O, forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee. Timon of Athens.
The king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matth. xiv. 9.

I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shak.
We are sorry for the satire interperfed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [From sawr, filth, Islandick.] Vile; worthless; vexatious.
A salt and sorry rheum offends me: Shakespeare's Othello.

Lend me thy handkerchief.
How now, why do you keep alone?
Of sorry fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should, indeed, have died
With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glanv.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain will serve to ply
'I be sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave! L'Estr.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley's Sermons.

SORT. n. f. [sorte, French.]

1. A kind; a species.
Disfigur'd more than spirit of happy sort. Milton.

A substantial and unaffected piety, not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Trilafin.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. Walsh.

Endeavouring to make the signification of specific names clear, they make their specific ideas of the sorts of substances of a few of those simple ideas found in them. Locke.

2. A manner; a form of being or acting.
Flowers in such sort worn, can neither be smelt nor seen well by those that wear them. Hooker.

That I may laugh at her in equal sort
As she doth laugh at me, and makes my pain her sport. Spenser's Sonnet.

Rheum and Shimmah wrote after this sort. Exra iv. 8.
To Adam in what sort shall I appear? Milton.

3. A degree of any quality.
I have written the more boldly unto you, in some sort, as putting you in mind. Rom. xv. 15.

I shall not be wholly without praise, if in some sort I have copied his file. Dryden.

4. A class, or order of persons.
The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all, the other, such as none but the wiser and more judicious sort can perform. Hooker.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakespeare.

Hospitality to the better sorts, and charity to the poor, two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. A company; a knot of people.
Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see;
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here. Shakespeare.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar.
Is signior Montano returned from the wars?—I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

7. [Sort, Fr. sortes, Latin.] A lot. Out of use.
Make a lot'try,
And by decree, let blockish Ajax
Draw the sort to fight with Hector. Shakespeare.

8. A pair; a set.
The first sort by their own suggestion fell. Milton.

To SORT. v. a. [Sortir, Lat. afforire, Italian.]
1. To separate into distinct and proper classes.
These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlac'd between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

I come to thee for charitable licence,
To sort our nobles from our common men. Shakespeare.

A piece of cloth made of white and black threads though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey; yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.

Shell-fish have been, by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon's Natural History.

With this desire, she hath a native might
To find out ev'ry truth, if she had time;
Th' innumerable effects to sort aright,
And by degrees from cause to cause to climb. Devoti.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another, and that either by refraction, or by reflexion. Newton's Opticks.

But grant that actions best discover man,
Take the most strong and sort them as you can;
The few that glare, each character must mark:
You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.
Let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;
And never be Bassanio so from me;
But God sort all! Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.
For, when the sorts things present with things past,
And thereby things to come doth off foresee;
When the doth doubt at first, and chuse at first,
These acts her own, without her body be. Devoti.

4. To

SOT

4. To cull; to chuse; to select.
Send his mother to his father's house,
That he may sot her out a worthy spouse. Chapman.

To SOT. v. n.
1. To be joined with others of the same species.
Nor do metals only sot and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. Woodward.

2. To confort; to join.
The liberality of parents towards their children, makes them base and sot with any company. Bacon.

3. To suit; to fit.
A man cannot speak to a son but as a father; whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it soteth with the person. Bacon.

They are happy whose natures sot with their vocations. Bacon.

Among unequals, what society
Can sot, what harmony, or true delight?
Which must be mutual, in proportion due,
Giv'n, and receiv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The Creator calling forth by name
His mighty angels, gave them several charge,
As sot best with present things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For diff'rent files with diff'rent subjects sot,
As several garbs with country, town, and court. Pope.

4. To terminate; to issue.
It sot not to any fight of importance, but to a retreat. Bacon's War with Spain.

5. To have success.
The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not soted to the same purpose as in their native country. Abbot's Description of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereunto flesh and a flower were put, and it soted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sot, a lot, or sortir, to issue, French.]
And so far am I glad it did so sot,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times soteth to inconvenience. Bacon.

SORTAL. adj. A word formed by Locke, but not yet received.
As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing but that idea which the sortal, if I may so call it from sort, as I do general from genus, name stands for. Locke.

SORTANCE. n. f. [from sort.] Suitableness; agreement.
I have received
New dated letters from Northumberland,
Their cold intent, thus:
Here doth he with his person, with such power
As might hold sortance with his quality,
The which he could not levy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

SORTILEGE. n. f. [sortilege, Fr. sortilegium, Latin.] The act or practice of drawing lots.

SORTIMENT. n. f. [from sort.]
1. The act of sorting; distribution.
2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

To SOT. v. n. [A cant word.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.

The winter sky began to frown,
Poor Stella must pack off to town;
From wholesome exercise and air,
To sitting in an easy chair. Swift.

SOT. n. f. [sot, Saxon; set, French; set, Dutch.]
1. A blockhead; a dull ignorant stupid fellow; a dolt.
Of Gloster's treachery;
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot;
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakespeare.

This by his tongue being made his mistress' picture,
And then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crackt of kitchen trulls, or his description
Provd us unspeaking sots. Shakespeare.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South's Sermons.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.
Every sign
That calls the staring sots to nasty wine.
A furly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word:
A brutal sot; who while the holds his head,
With drunken filth bedaubed the nuptial bed.
To sot. v. a. To stupidity; to be lost. Granville.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A drizzling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Span. Friar.

SOV

The potion
Turns his brain and stupifies his mind;
The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

To SOT. v. n. To tipple to stupidity.
SOTTISH. adj. [from sot.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.
All's but naught:
Patience is sottish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king
Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton.

'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology. Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.
SOTTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland sottishly mad with over great fortune, procured the King by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy, and superstition sottishly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanville.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another;
and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

SOTTISHNESS. n. f. [from sottish.] Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may find themselves into. South's Sermons.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottishness of Atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity. Bentley's Sermons.

SOVEREIGN. adj. [souverain, French; sovrano, Spanish.]
1. Supreme in power; having no superior.
As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer teacheth that we acknowledge him our sove- reign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

None of us who now thy grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before,
Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
Call us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

Whether Elau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birth right, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious.
A memorial of their fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick;
and to this preservative of no better report than a horse drench. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Love-wounded Protheus,
My bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shakespeare.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.

Like the scum starv'd men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
Which were with any sovereign fatness blest. Donne.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense. Dryden.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.
O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakespeare.

By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands desir'd. Dryden.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.] Supremely; in the highest degree.
He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. f. [souveraineté, French.] Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.
Give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employed and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty. Shakespeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shakespeare.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have
the

the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be fill'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty.
Nothing does to gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren. Govern. of the Tongue.
Jove's own tree,

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his t'mpest boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.

I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade.
Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus.

Southern. n. f. [from sou, French.] A subterraneous drain.
Yet could not such mines, without great pains, and charges, if at all, be wrought; the dells would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any addits or fouls to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Another of like fort, was found in sinking a fouls-pit at High in Lancashire.

Southern. n. f. [from sou, French.] A subterraneous drain.
I am fouls of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that fouls me not.

The works of the Lord are great, fouls out of all them that have pleasure therein.

Southern. n. f. [from sou, French.] A subterraneous drain.
1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either.

Die, sic, unrepentant tongue! to call her bad,
Whole sovereignty to oft thou hast prefer'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good;
Since all God's creatures, mortal and divine;
Since God himself is her eternal food.

He remembered them of the promises, seals and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage, that these being religious bonds between God and their souls, could not by any political act of state be dissolved.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense.
2. Vital principle.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
Drug-working forerers that change the mind;
Souls-killing witches that deform the body;
And many such like libertines of sin.

I hold almost mak't me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men.

Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul.
Twin voices all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heav'n-gate ascend,
Beat on your wings, and in your notes his praise.

In common discourse and writings, we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.

3. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.
He has the very soul of bounty.
Charity the soul of all the rest.

4. Interior power.
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.

5. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.
Three wenches where I stood, cry'd:
"Alas, good soul!"
This is a poor mad soul, and she lays up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.

The poor soul fat singing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow.
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.
Uncharg'd souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscopes, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn.

6. Human being.
The moral is the case of every soul of us.
Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your change is such as does not need defence.

It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls.
My state of health none care to learn;
My life is here no soul's concern.

7. Active power.
Earth, air and seas, through empty space would rowl,
And heav'n would fly before the driving soul.

8. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.
9. Intelligent being in general.

Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee.
Southern. n. f. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,
Wou'dst thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd, Shou'd give the prizes they had gain'd before.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.] Mean; low; spiritless.
Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely base!

Southern. n. f. [from soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called penia sepulchralis & symbolum animae, and a Saxon soul- shot.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.] A subterraneous drain.
1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the souls man.

He hath a heart as souls as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.
He hath received him safe and souls.

We can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understanding souls.

The king visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the souls,
Honours the princely chiefs.

But Capys, and the rest of souls mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the deep.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a souls or healthy pulse, a souls digestion, souls deep, are all so called, with reference to a souls and healthy constitution; but if you speak of souls doctrine, or souls speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical.

2. Right; not erroneous.
Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our souls knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence.

Let my heart be souls in thy statutes, that I be not alhamed.
The rules are souls and useful, and may serve your devotion.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.
The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give souls strokes with their clubs, wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows.

4. Valid; not failing.
They reserved their titles, tenures, and signories whole and souls to themselves.

5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.
New wak'd from souls sleep,
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.] Soundly; heartily; completely fast.
The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So souls he slept that nought might him awake.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.] A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.

The souls of Denmark, where ships pay toll.
Behold I come, sent from the Stygian souls,
As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,
T'ingender with the night, and blast the day.

Him young Thooia bore, the bright increase
Of Phorcys, dreaded in the souls and seas.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.] A probe, an instrument used by chirurgians to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, pass the souls till it meet with some resistance.

1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.
In this secret there is a gulf, which while we live we shall never souls.

You are, Hastings, much too shallow
To souls the bottom of the after-times.

2. To try; to examine.
Has he never before souls you in this business.

Invites these lords, and those he meant to souls.
I was in jest,
And by that offer meant to souls your breast.

I've souls my Numidians, man by man,
And find 'em ripe for a revolt.

3. To try with the sounding line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country and souls found it near twenty fathoms.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of, infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his souls-line, he reaches no bottom.

Southern. n. f. The cuttle-fish.
Southern. n. f. [from sou, French; sonus, Latin.]
1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid souls, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poetry.

And made a monster of their fantasy.
Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a souls,
While you perform your antick round.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a souls: so a long pole struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water, maketh a souls.

The warlike souls of trumpets loud.
When'er he spoke his voice was heard around,
Load as a trumpet with a silver souls.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called souls; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.

which might make no ill souls in mens ears.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not souls that must be the principle.

To souls. v. n.
1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

From you souls out the word of the Lord.
Trumpet once more to souls at general doom.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking-trumpets how to souls.

Thither the silver souls lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires.

2. To exhibit by likeness of sound.
Why do you start, and seem to fear Things that do souls to fair?

They being told there was small hope of ease
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that souls liberty.

This relation souls rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth.

To souls. v. a.
1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
And many nymphs about them flocking round,
And many tritons, which their horns did souls.

Michael bid souls
Th' archangel trumpet.

Mifenus lay; none so renown'd
The warrior trumpet in the field to souls;
With breathing brass to kindle fierce alarms,
And rouse to dare their fate in honourable arms.

2. To betoken or direct by a sound.
Once Jove from Ida did both hosts survey,
And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;
Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should souls,
The louder cannon had the thunder drown'd.

3. To celebrate by sound.
Sun, souls his praise.

Southern. n. f. [from soul and board.] Board which propagates the found in organs.

Try it without any *souls*board along, only harpwise at one end of the string.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the *souls*board breathes.

Southern. n. f. [from soul.]
1. Healthily; heartily.

2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.
Where'er Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this hard day's journey
Soundly invite him.

They did ply
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other halbers made me souls fast.

Who had so often in your aid
So many ways been souls paid;
Came in at last for better ends.

Have no concern,
Provided Punch, for there's the jest,
Be souls maul'd, and plague the rest.

To souls. v. n. To try with the sounding line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country and souls found it near twenty fathoms.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of,
infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his souls-line, he reaches
no bottom.

Southern. n. f. The cuttle-fish.
Southern. n. f. [from sou, French; sonus, Latin.]
1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid souls, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poetry.

And made a monster of their fantasy.
Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a souls,
While you perform your antick round.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a souls: so a long pole struck upon gravel in
the bottom of the water, maketh a souls.

The warlike souls of trumpets loud.
When'er he spoke his voice was heard around,

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addison's Cato.
2. Original; first cause.
This second source of men, while yet but few,
With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Parad. Lost.
This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.
Of himself is none;
But that eternal Infinite, and One,
Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.
3. First producer.
Famous Greece,
That source of art and cultivated thought,
Which they to Rome, and Romans hither brought. Waller.

The stern Athenian prince
Then sourly smil'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
SOURNESS. n. f. [from sour.]
1. Acidity; austereness of taste.
Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body, and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon's Natural History.
I th' Spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But Summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Denham.
He knew
For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
And tame to plumb the sourness of the flos. Dryd. Virgil.
Of acid or four one has a notion from taste, sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbutnot.
Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end? Pope.
2. Austerity; harshness of temper.
Pegasus carped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too harshly thereof. Hooker.
He was never thought to be of that superstitious sourness, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.
Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncon-fortable melancholy nature. Addison's Freeholder.

But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart. Pope.
2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.
They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.
Who those were that run away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;
Although the rabble sou'd them for't,
O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butler.
They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy,
So that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addison's Guardian.
To SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original.] To fall as a bird on its prey.
Thus on some silver swan, or tim'rous hare,
Jove's bird comes souing down from upper air;
Her crooked talons crush the fearful prey,
Then out of sight she soars. Dryden's En.
Jove's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden's Jun.
To SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

and dry day, and when the wind bloweth not south. Bacon.
SO'UTHING. adj. [from the noun.] Going towards the South.
I will conduct thee on thy way,
When next the southing fun inflames the day. Dryden.
Not far from hence, if I observ'd aright
The southing of the stars and polar light, Sicilia lies. Dryden's En.
SOUTHEAST. n. f. [South and East.] The point between the East and South; the point of Winter sunrise.
The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the South, or southeast sun, doth hasten their ripening; and the southeast is found better than the Southwest. Bacon.
The three seas of Italy, the Inferior towards the southeast, the Ionian towards the South, and the Adriatick on the Northeast side, were commanded by three different nations. Arbutnot.
SO'UTHERLY. adj. [from South.]

2. An insect; a millepede. Anglo-Saxon.
SO'WBREAD. n. f. [cydaneus, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a thick round fleshy root: the flowers arise singly upon pedicles from the root, which consist of one leaf, divided into five or six segments, which are reflexed almost to the bottom, where they are divided: the point of the flower becomes a round membranaceous fruit, which contains roundish seeds. Miller.
To SOW. v. n. [solan, Gothick; sapan, Saxon; saejen,
Dutch.] To scatter seed in order to a harvest.
The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness: they that pray do but sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped. Hooker.
The vintage shall reach unto the sowing time. Lev. xxvii. 5.
They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Pf. cxxvii. 5.
He that soweth to his flesh, shall reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8.
Saw to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Hef.
To SOW. v. a. part. pass. sown.
1. To scatter in the ground in order to growth; to propagate by seed.
Like was not to be found,
Save in that soil where all good things did grow,
And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground
As incultivated nature did them sow. Fairy Queen.
From Ireland came I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rural sow'd. Shakespeare's H. VI.
I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in you. 2 Bdr.
Many plants, which grow in the hotter countries, being let in the colder, will, being sown of seeds late in the Spring, come up and abide most part of the Summer. Bacon.
The intellectual faculty is a goodly field, capable of great improvement; and it is the worst husbandry in the world to sow it with trifles or impertinencies. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
When to turn
The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn, Hing, Mcenas. Dryden's Georg.
The proud and proper views her precious brood,
And happier branches, which the never sow'd. Dryden.

the breadth and length. Gulliver.
SO'WTHISTLE. n. f. A weed.
Sowthistles though coney eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which rubbed on warts weareth them away, which sheweth it is corrosive. Bacon.
SPAAD. n. f. A kind of mineral.
English tale, of which the coarser sort is called plaister or parget; the finer, spaad, earth-flux, or salamander's hair.
Woodward's Met. Foss.
SPACE. n. f. [spatium, Latin.]
1. Room; local extension.
Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.
Oh, undistinguish'd space of woman's wit!
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life,
And the exchange my brother. Shak. King Lear.
This which yields or fills all space. Milton.
Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.
Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be aligned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.
2. Any quantity of place.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich Earth to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods about ten miles space to Walpole. Knox.
In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled space would be intercepted amongst them. Barnet.
Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.
3. Quantity of time.
Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.
In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins's Math. Mag.
God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay 'till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson's Sermons.
The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison's Freeholder.
4. A small time; a while.
Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.
Compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space, 'till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
SPACIOUS. adj. [spacius, Fr. spatiosus, Latin.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.
The former buildings, which were but mean, contented them not: spacious and ample churches they erected throughout every city. Hooker.
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;
And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.
Merab with spacious beauty fills the fight,
But too much awe chafte'd the bold delight.
Like an English gen'ral will I die.
And all the ocean make my spacious grave:
Women and cowards on the land may lie;
The sea's a tomb that's proper for the brave. Dryden.
SPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spacious.] Roominess; wide extension.

Will you with courtesy sum

The vast proportion of his infinite?

Aud buckle in a waste most fathomless,

With span and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons? Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

Sum how brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span, Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

To keep your earthly audit.

The virgin's part, the mother and the wife, Waller.

So well the acted in this span of life.

Then confidence, unrefrain'd by fears, began

To stretch her limits, and extend the span, Dryden.

Life's but a span, I'll ev'ry inch enjoy. Farghar.

time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content

he shall reign. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Boys shall not play

At span-counter or blowpoint, but shall pay

Toll to some courtier. Donne.

SPA

His chief solace is to steal down, and play at span-fairing with the page. Swift.

SPARGE. n. f. [Spargen, Dutch.] This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.

The colours that flew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; andouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Eaton.

SPA'NGLE. n. f. [Spanglen, German, a buckle, a locket: whence der spangen, ear-ring.]

1. A small plate or bulb of shining metal.

2. Any thing sparkling and shining.

As hoary frost with spangles doth attire

The mossy branches of an oak half dead. Fairy Queen.

Thus in a starry night fond children cry

For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.

The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence: vulgar spectators see them

but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Gawil.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,

A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

To SPA'NGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

They never meet in grove or green,

By fountain clear, or spangled fairlight then. Shakespeare.

What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,

As those two eyes become that heavenly face. Shakespeare.

Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,

That th' eyes of busy fools may be stop't there. Donne.

Four faces each

Had, like a double Janus; all their shape

Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then appear'd

Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd

With the bright luminaries, that set and rose. Milton.

The spacious firmament on high,

With all the blue ethereal sky,

And spangl'd heav'n's, a shining frame,

Their great Original proclaim. Addison's Spectator.

2. To have unemployed; to save from any particular use.

All the time he could spare from the necessary cares of his weighty charge he bestowed on prayer, and serving of God:

he oftentimes spent the night alone in church-praying, his head-pieces, gorgets, and gauntlets lying by him. R. Wall.

He had no bread to spare. W. E. W.

Only the foolish virgins entertained this foolish conceit, that there might be an overplus of grace sufficient to supply their want; but the wife knew not of any that they had to spare, but supposed all that they had little enough. Trifles.

Let a pamphlet come in a proper juncture, and every one who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

3. To do without; to lose willingly.

I could have better sparr'd a better man. Shak. Hen. IV.

For his mind, I do not care;

Let his title be what he will;

His clothes rich, and hand fit neat.

Sense of pleasure we may well

Spare out of life perhaps, and not repine;

But pain is perfect misery. Milton.

Now she might spare the ocean, and oppose

Your conduct to the fierceness of her seas. Waller.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;

Nor can we spare you long, tho' often we may lend. Dryden.

4. To omit; to forbear.

We might have sparr'd our coming;

Be pleas'd thy politics to spare;

I'm old enough, and can myself take care. Dryden.

5. To use tenderly; to forbear; to treat with pity; not to afflict; not to destroy; to use with mercy.

But man alone can whom he conquers spare. Waller.

Spare me one hour! O spare me but a moment. Irene.

6. To grant; to allow; to indulge.

Set me in the remotest place,

That Neptune's frozen arms embrace;

Where angry Love did never spare.

One breath of kind and temperate air. Rescommon.

7. To forbear to inflict or impose.

Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day;

And still the blush hangs here. Dryden. All for Love.

O spare this great, this good, this aged king,

And spare your foul the crime! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Spare my fight the pain

Of seeing what a world of tears it costs you. Dryden.

To SPARE. v. n.

1. To live frugally; to be parsimonious; to be not liberal.

He has wherewithal: in him

Sparing would show a worse fin than ill doctrine. Shakespeare.

These wants, which they rather feared than felt, would well enough be overcome by sparring and patience. Kneller.

Our labours late and early every morning,

Midst Winter frosts, then clad and tied with sparring,

Rise to our toils. Ottway.

SPA

I was not forgetful of the sparks which some mens disem-pers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.
In this deep quiet, from what source unknown,
Those seeds of fire that fatal birth disclose:
And first, few scatt'ring sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose. Dryden.
Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

2. Any thing shining.
We have, here and there, a little clear light, some sparks of bright knowledge. Locke.

3. Any thing vivid or active.
If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell, and say, I sent thee thither. Shakspeare.
4. A lively, showy, splendid, gay man. It is commonly used of contempt.

How many huffing sparks have we seen, that in the same day have been both the idols and the scorn of the same slaves? L'Estrange.

A spark like thee, of the mankilling trade Fell sick. Dryden.
As for the disputes of sharpeners, we don't read of any provisions made for the honours of such sparks. Collier.
The finest sparks, and cleanest beaux
Drip from the shoulders to the toes. Prior.

I who have been the poet's spark to day,
Will now become the champion of his play. Graville.
Unlucky as Pungoso in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display
What the fine gentlemen were yesterday. Pope.

To SPARK, v. n. [from the noun.] To emit particles of fire;
to sparkle. Not in use.

Fair is my love,
When the rose in her cheek appears,
Or in her eyes the fire of love doth spark. Spenser.
SPARKFUL, adj. [spark and full.] Lively; brisk; airy.
Hitherto will our sparkful youth laugh at their great grandfather's English, who had more care to do well than to speak minion-like. Camden's Remains.

SPARKISH, adj. [from spark.]

feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.

SPARKLE, n. f. [from spark.]
1. A spark; a small particle of fire.

Of clashing flints, their hidden fires provokes;
Short flame succeeds, a bed of wither'd leaves
The dying sparkles in their fall receives:
Caught into life, in fiery fumes they rise,
And, fed with stronger food, invade the skies. Dryden.

2. Any luminous particle.
To detract from the dignity thereof, were to injure ev'n
God himself, who being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights wherof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise. Hosker.

When reason's lamp, which, like the sun in sky,
Throughout man's little world her beams did spread,
Is now become a sparkle which doth lie
Under the ashes, half extinct and dead. Davies.

Ah then! thy once lov'd Eloisa feel
It will be then no crime to gaze on me,
See from my cheek the transient roses die,
See the last sparkle languish in my eye. Pope.

To SPARKLE, v. n. [from the noun.]

discover no fault in the bone. Wijman's Surgery.

SPAVIN, n. f. [spavens, Fr. spavens, Italian.] his disease in horses is a bony excrescence or crusts hard as a bone, that grows on the inside of the hough, not far from the elbow, and is generated of the same matter by which the bones or ligaments are nourished: it is at first like a tender gristle, but by degrees comes to hardness. Farrier's Dict.

They've all new legs and lame ones; one would take us
That never saw them pace before, the spavins,
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

If it had been a spavin, and the ass had petitioned for another farrier, it might have been reasonable. L'Estrange.
SPAWN, n. f. [from spaw in Germany.] A place famous for mineral waters; any mineral water.

To SPAWN, v. n. [from spaw, to spit, Saxon.] To throw out spittle out of the mouth.

He who does on w'ry tables dine,
His marble floors with drunken spawnings shine. Dryden.
What mischief can the dean have done him,
That Traulus calls for vengeance on him?
Why must he putter, spawn, and flaver it,
In vain against the people's fav'rite. Swift.

SPAWL, n. f. [spawl, Saxon.] Spittle; moisture ejected from the mouth.
Of spittle the lustration makes;

ample would have been his defence. Atterbury.

5. To give sound.
Make all your trumpets speake, give them all breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Shakspeare.

6. To speak with; to addres; to converse with.
Thou can't not fear us, Pompey, with thy fails,
We'll speake with thee at sea. Shakspeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

I spoke with one that came from thence,
That freely render'd me these news for true. Shakspeare.
Nicholas was by a herald sent for to come into the great hall; Solyman disdaining to speake with him himself. Knoles.

To SPEAK, v. a.
1. To utter with the mouth; to pronounce.
Saul spoke not any think that day. 1 Sam. xx. 26.

Montecali had spoken good. Elph. vii. 3.
Consider of it, take advice, and speake your minds. Judges.
They fat down with him upon the ground, and none spoke a word. Jab. ii. 12.

When divers were hardened, and believed not, but spoke evil of that way before the multitude, he departed. Mat. xix. 9.
You, from my youth,
Have known and try'd me, speake! more than truth? Sandy.

SPE

What you keep by you, you may change and mend,
But words once spoke can never be recall'd. Waller.
Under the tropick is our language spoke. Waller.
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.
He no where speaks it out, or in direct terms calls them substances. Locke.
Colours speake all languages, but words are understood only by such a people or nation. Speiater.

2. To proclaim; to celebrate.
It is my father's music.
To speake your deeds, not little of his care.
To have them recommended. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

3. To address; to accost.
If he have need of thee, he will deceive thee, smile upon thee, put thee in hope, speake thee fair, and say, what waitest thou? Ecclus. xiii. 6.

4. To exhibit.
Let heav'n's wide circuit speake
The Maker's high magnificence. Milton.

SPEAKABLE, adj. [from speake.]

2. Having the power of speech.
Says,
How can't thou speakeable of mute. Milton.

SPEAKER, n. f. [from speake.]
1. One that speaks.
These fables grew so general, as the authors were lost in the generality of speakers. Bacon's Henry VII.

In conversation or reading, find out the true sense, idea which the speaker or writer affixes to his words. Watts's Logic.
Common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to cloath them in; and these are always ready at the mouth. Swift.

2. One that speaks in any particular manner.
Horace's phrase is terret secur.
And happy was that curious speaker. Prior.

3. One that celebrates, proclaims, or mentions.
After my death, I with no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions
To keep mine honour from corruption. Shakspeare.

4. The prolocutor of the commons.
I have disabled myself like an elected speaker of the house. Dryd.
SPEAKING TRUMPET, n. f. A stentorophonick instrument; a trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance;
That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And list taught speaking trumpet how to found. Dryden.

SPEAR, n. f. [yl-per, Welsh; ypere, Saxon; spere, Dutch; spere, old French; sporum, low Lat.]
1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

The Egyptian, like a hill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a spear. Cervely.
Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.

The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air.
The rous'd up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the pretended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance generally with prongs, to kill fish.
The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them, cast a strong corded net adhwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunter's mercy, who, by an old custom, share them with such indifference, as if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear-hunters in taking of falmons. Carew.

To SPEAR, v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR, v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.
Let them not lie left they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPEARGRASS, n. f. [spear and grass.] Long stiff grass.
Tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed; and then beslobber our garments with it. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

SPEARMAN, n. f. [spear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.
The spearman's arm by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.

SPEARWORT, n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
SPECIAL, adj. [special, Fr. specialis, Latin.]

1. Noting a sort or species.
A special idea is called by the schools a species. Watts.
2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.
The several books of scripture having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hosker.

Of

SPE

- Of all men alive
I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakespeare.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakespeare.
Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture, as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interests to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.
O Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Davies.
4. Extraordinary; uncommon.
That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.
Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised, but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt's Sermons.
A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.
5. Chief in excellence.
The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakef. Henry IV.
SPECIALLY. adv. [from special.] Arbuthnot.
1. Particularly above others.
Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord. Deutr.
A brother beloved, specially to me. Phil. xvi.
2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.
If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it specially.
Hale.
SPECIALTY. n. f. [specialité, French; from special.] Par-SPECIALTY. n. f. particularity.
On these two general heads all other specialties are dependent. Hooker.
The packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound. Shakespeare.
Specialty of rule hath been neglected. Shakespeare.
When men were sure, that in case they rested upon a bare contract without specialties, the other party might waive his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a specialty which accorded many suits. Hale.
SPECIES. n. f. [species, Latin.]
1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.
A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot, and Snowball. Watts.
2. Class of nature; single order of beings.
He intendeth only the care of the species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
For we are animals no less,
Although of different species. Hudibras.
Thou canst not a race which must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.
A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion; and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.
An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.
It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.
The species of the letters illuminated with blue were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared to confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton's Opticks.
4. Representation to the mind.
Wit in the poet, or wit-writing is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.
5. Show; visible exhibition.
Shews and species serve best with the common people. Bacon.
6. Circulating money.
As there was in the time of the greatest splendour of the Roman empire, a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

SPE

7. Simple that have place in a compound.
SPECIFIC. n. f. [specificus, French; species and factus.]
SPECIFIC. adj. [specificus, French; species and factus.]
1. That which makes a thing of the species of which it is.
That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
To thee all her specific forms I'll show. Danham.
The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though as to the specific nature of its acts it is determined by the object. Bacon.
By whose direction is the nutriment to regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glenn.
These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton's Opticks.
As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.
Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight, which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.
The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt and earth appear to be the same in all plants. Arbuthnot.
Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.
2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular disease. It is usually applied to the aromata, or medicines that work by occult qualities.
The operation of purging medicines have been referred to a hidden property, a specific virtue, and the like fables of ignorance. Deane's Natural History.
If he would drink a good decoction of farsa, with the usual specifics, he might enjoy a good health. Watts.
SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. Scott's Sermons.
Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no concept of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple concepts, nor of any other universal. Grew.
He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same ef-fectious then as ever since; and that, if an ax head be supposed to float upon water which is specifically lighter, it has been supernatural. Bentley.
3. SPECIFICATE. v. a. [from species and factus.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.
Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specificating, concurrent, new imperative act of the divine special providence. Hale.
SPECIFICATION. n. f. [from specific; specificatio, Fr.]
1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.
This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. Particular mention.
The constitution here speaks generally without the speci- fication of any place. Adelphi's Paragon.
3. SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specificare, Fr.] To mention;
to show by some particular marks of distinction.
As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such, must be great. Bentley.
St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Bentley.
He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils are specified. Pope.
SPECIMEN. n. f. [specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited that the rest may be known.
Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Adelphi's Spectator.

She next I took to wife.
O that I never had I found with too late!
Was in the vale of Sores, Dalila. Milton.
I hat spectus monster, my accomplish'd snare. Milton.
2. Plausible;

SPE

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.
Bad men boast
Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.
Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.
Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.
This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celebracy. Atterbury.
SPECTACIOUSLY. adv. [from specious.] With fair appearance.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and unfeignedness; especially to that perfunctory devotion under which any kind of impurity is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously. Hammond.
SPECK. n. f. [speccus, Saxon.] A small discoloration; a spot.
Every speck does not blind a man. Gower, of the Tongue.
Then are they happy, when
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden's Æneid.
To SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.
Flow'r
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold. Milton.
SPECKLE. n. f. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.
To SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forcibly up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen.
Speck'd vanity
Willicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.
Saw'st thou not late a speck'd serpent rear
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.
The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Plea'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forked tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Mithras.
The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the speck'd and the white. Pope.
SPECKY. or speight. n. f. A woodpecker. Shakespeare.
SPECTACLE. n. f. [spectaculum, Latin.]
1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.
In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick spectacle to all. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
We are made a spectacle unto angels, and men. 1 Cor. iv. 9.
2. Any thing perceived by the sight.
Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A dunghill of dead carcases he spy'd,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride. Fa. Queen.
When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad,
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad. Denham.
3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.
The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side. Shakespeare.
We have helps for the sight far above spectacles and glasses. Bacon.
It is no fault in the spectacles that the blind man sees not.
Shakespeare was naturally learned: he needed not the specta- cles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.
The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. Grew.
This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.
This day, then let us not be told,
That you are sick and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills. Swift.
SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with specta- cles.
All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
SPECTATION. n. f. [spectatio, Latin.] Regard; respect.
This simple spectation of the lungs is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.
SPECTATOR. n. f. [spectator, Fr. spectator, Latin.] A looker-on; a beholder.
More

What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Sand.
SPECTRE. n. f. [spektre, Fr. spectrum, Latin.] Apparition; appearance of persons dead.
The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatick spektres to rejoice. Dryden.
The very poetical use of the word for a spectre, doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stilling.
These are nothing but spektres the understanding raises to itself to flatter its own laziness. Locke.
SPECTATORSHIP. n. f. [from spectator.] Act of beholding.
Thou stand'st in th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering. Shakespeare.
SPECTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] An image; a visible form.
This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in encreasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton's Opticks.
SPECTULAR. n. f. [specularis, Latin.]
1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking glass.
It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone. Donne.
Quicksilver may by the fire alone, in glass-vessels, be trans-ed into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before. Boyle.
A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.
2. Affixing sight. Improper.
The hidden way
Of nature would'st thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.
To SPECULATE. v. n. [specular, Fr. specular, Lat.] To meditate;
to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.
Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrinsecal relation. Digby on Bodies.
As our news-writers record many facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and by their variety of conjectures become consummate statesmen.
Addison.
To SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.
Man was not meant to gaze, or look upward with the eye, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SPECULATION. n. f. [speculation, Fr. from speculate.]
1. Examination by the eye; view.
2. Examiner; spy. This word is found no where else, and probably is here misprinted for speculator.
They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Throne and set high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.
In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained after speculations, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.
Thenceforth to speculations high or deep,
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.
News-writers afford matter of speculation. Addison.
4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.
From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.

Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.

The priest reply'd no more, But speed his steps along the hoarse refounding shore. Dryden.

6. To execute; to dispatch.

Judicial acts are all those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are speed in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties. Ayliff's Foreman.

7. To assist; to help forward.

Reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throws. Dryden.

Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night With rising gales, that speed their happy flight. Dryden.

Speed the soft intercourse from foul to foul, And wait a sigh from Indus to the Pole. Pope.

8. To make prosperous.

If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. St. Paul.

Timon is shunk, indeed; And he, that's once deny'd, will hardly speed. Shakespeare.

SPEED. n. f. [speed, Dutch.]

1. Quickness; celerity.

Earth receives As tribute, such a sumless journey brought Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light;

Speed to describe whose swiftness number fails. Milton.

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docileness, and desire of glory. Mere.

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wonted distance between them and their aims: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquiescence.

The course or pace of a horse.

He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol, kills a sparrow flying. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

4. Success; event.

If I read aught in heav'n, Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars, Voluminous or single characters,

In their conjunction met, give me to spell, Sorrows and labours, opposition, haste, Attends thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd The fierce Epirote, and the African bold, Whether to settle peace, or to unfold

The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton.

And may at last my weary age Find out the peaceful hermitage, Where I may fit and rightly spell

Of every star that heav'n doth show, And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To read unskillfully.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude unwritten blank; sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. South.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but 'twas found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SPEEDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; swift; nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near's the other army? —Near, and on speedy foot: the main desecry Stands on the hourly thought. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Back with speediest fail Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing, Came flying. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let it be enough what thou hast done, When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street,

With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun, The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPELL. n. f. [from spell, a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:

Sunt verba & voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem

Puffin. Start not; her actions shall be holy:

You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her, Until you see her die again; for then

You kill her double. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and daffies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms, Had not spells

And black enchantments, some magician's art, Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milton's Agonistes.

Begin, begin, the mystick spell prepare. Milton.

Youself you fo' exed, When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,

That like a spirit with this spell Of my own teaching, I am caught. Waller.

Mild Lucina Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,

And spoke the pow'rful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dry.

2. A turn of work.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL. v. a. [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.

In the criticism of spelling, the word fatire ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

2. To read by naming letters singly.

I never yet saw man, How wife, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,

But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd, She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakespeare.

3. To charm.

I have you fast: Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,

And try if they can gain your liberty. Shak. Henry VI.

This gather'd in the planetary hour, With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,

Dire Replames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.

What small knowledge was, in them did dwell; And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.

By passing on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats, has played himself into spelling. Locke.

The Latin, being written of the same character with the mother-tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book, it is legible. Speelater.

Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.

2. To read.

If I read aught in heav'n, Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,

Voluminous or single characters, In their conjunction met, give me to spell,

Sorrows and labours, opposition, haste, Attends thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To SPEND. v. a. [from spen, Saxon; spendere, Italian.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to lay out.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds. Shakespeare.

I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Cor. xii. 15.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wife, but a foolish man spendeth it up. Prov. xxi. 20.

We must exasperate Th'almighty Victor to spend all his rage.

Thus labour could at first begin a title of property in the common things of nature, and spending it upon our uses bound it. Locke.

Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To bestow as expence; to expend.

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Jf. iv. 2.

Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion. Boyle.

3. To effuse.

Coward dogs Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakespeare. Henry V.

4. To squander; to lavish.

They bend their bows, they whirl their flings around; Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground. Dryden.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend their estates. Wake.

5. To pass.

When we can intreat an hour to serve, Would spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job xxi. 13.

He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. 1 Esdr. iv. 21.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.
Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bacon's Henry VII.
SPENDTHRIFT. n. f. [spend and thrift.] A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spend-thrift. L'Estrange.

Some fawning usurer does feed
With present fums th' unwary spendthrift's need. Dryden.
Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPERABLE. adj. [spereabilis, Latin.] Such as may be hoped.

We may call it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not spereable. Bacon.

SPERM. n. f. [spume, Fr. sperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperma required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperma. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperma of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPERMACEUM. n. f. [Latin.] Corruptedly pronounced permaquity.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is to float into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salt; but in this fluid 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates in a press, and afterwards exposing the remainder to the open air: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPERMATICAL. adj. [spermatique, Fr. from sperma.]

SPERMATICK. adj. [spermatique, Fr. from sperma.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but sperma- tical or vital. More's Divine Dialogues.

Metals and fundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the more spiritual part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray on the Creation.

To SPERMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCLE. n. f. [σπερμακλή, Gr.] A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air,
Stop thy cloudy ebon chair. Milton.

To SPEW. v. a. [spejan, Saxon; spewen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A two-diffid him from the rest did funder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under His wide abyfs, him forced forth to spew. Fairy Queen.

That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dryden's Georg.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden flow;
And when the fouler bottom spews the black,
The Strygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abomi-nations, that the land spew not you out. Lev. xxviii. 38.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the fust of courts. Bacon's Essays.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd. Milton.

2. Any globe of the mundane system

What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should hear? Fairy Queen.

And then moral ears
Had heard the music of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.

I two figures on the sides embos'd appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere. Dryden.

And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.

5. Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

[From the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.]

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Of enemies he could not but contract good store, while moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. K. C.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to the aethereal kind. Pope.

To SPHERE. v. a. [from sphere.]

1. To place in a sphere.

The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakespeare.

2. To form into roundness.

Light from her native East
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SPHERICAL. adj. [spherique, French; from sphere.]

SPHERICK. adj. [spherique, French; from sphere.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low. Raleigh.

Though founds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the found, yet they go farthest in the fore-lines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.

By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Clavi.

A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Hill.

Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of

The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africa, and the unknown reft,
Were easily found. Denne.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison on Italy.

SPICK AND SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Sax. expander, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth new extended or dressed at the clothers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spike or tenters:
it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour, thou hast got,
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Diét.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίς, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch; speyden, Danish, to spy, to lye upon the catch. Dop, bopa, Saxon, is a beetle, or properly an bumble bee, or stingless bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the door?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can with to adders, spiders, toads. Shakespeare.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand Drayton.

The innocent to free.

Indolous, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr. LITTLETON.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

A woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head.
He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spike- nard, enriching it with every spicy shrub.

SPILL, n. f. [spijlen, Dutch.]
1. A small thiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern.

Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole, stopped with a spill.

2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity.

To SPILL, v. a. [spillen, Dutch; spilla, Italian.]

1. To shed; to lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

And I constrained am this blood to spill.
They having spilt much blood, and done much waste, Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey.

Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.

Sichaus' blood, by his false brother spilt,
I have revenged.

And spill her children's blood upon the stage.

Orbellan did disgrace
With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt?

Nor the Centaurs tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled,
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilt.

Why are ye so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to have than spill.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germin spill at once
That make ingrateful man.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.

3. To throw away.

This fight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest.

To SPILL, v. n.

1. To waste; to be lavish.

Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.
He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.

He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last.

To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spin out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day.

To SPIN, v. n.

1. To exercise the art of spinning.

We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin.

2. To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets spin,
So sharp were their encounters.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the fun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the fun,
He from the East his flaming road begin,
Or the from West her silent course advance

With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while the paces e'en
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out.

SPINACH, n. f. [spinacia, Latin.] A plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which, in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them.

SPINAGE, n. f. [spina, Latin.] Belonging to the back bone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous thereto.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain, and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts.

Descending careles from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck and spinal marrow bruise'd.

SPINDLE, n. f. [spindel, German; spindel, Dutch.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twisting about of spindles.

Sing to those that hold the vital fibres,
And turn the adamant spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation as not to keep his promise, and deal merciful pardons.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Refum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew;
Forgot the scepter she so well had sway'd.

And with that mildness, she had rul'd, obey'd.
Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom?

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break.

3. To draw out into threads.

The women spin goats hair.

To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say all the yarn
she spin, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue;
The finest of the wool is left for you.

Her lawyer is a little riddled, spindleshanked gentleman.

SPINDLETREE, n. f. Prickwood. A plant.

SPINE, n. f. [spina, Latin.] The back bone.

The rapier entered his right side, reaching within a finger's breadth of the spine.

There are who think the marrow of a man,
Which in the spine, while he was living, ran;
When dead, the pith corrupted, will become A snake, and hiss within the hollow tomb.

SPINEL, n. f. A sort of mineral. Spinel-ruby is of a bright rosy red; it is softer than the rock or balofo ruby.

SPINET, n. f. [spinette, French.] A small harpichord, an instrument with keys.

When mis delights in her spinnets,
A fiddler may his fortune get.

SPINIFEROUS, adj. [spina and fero, Latin.] Bearing thorns.

SPINNER, n. f. [spinn.]

1. One skilled in spinning.

A practiced spinner shall spin a pound of wool worth two hillings for sixpence.

2. A garden spider with long jointed legs.

Weaving spiders come not here:
Hence you long leg'd spinners, hence.

SPINNING WHEEL, n. f. [spinn.] The wheel by which, since the distaff of the rock, the thread is drawn.

My spinning wheel and rake,
Let Susan keep for her dear sister's sake.

SPINNY, adj. I suppose spinn, spinn. A barbarous word.

They plow it early in the year, and then there will come some spinn grass that will keep it from scalding in summer.

SPINOSITY, n. f. [spinosus, Latin.] Crabbedness; thorny or briary perplexity.

Philosophy consisted of nought but dry spinosities, lean notions, and endless alterations about things of nothing.

SPINOUS, adj. [spinosus, Latin.] Thorny; full of thorns.

SPINSTER, n. f. [spinn.]

1. A woman that spins.

The spinster and the knitters in the fun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it.

2. [In law.] The general term for a girl or maiden woman.

One Michael Cassio,
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster.

I desire that a yearly annuity of twenty pounds shall be paid to Rebecca Dingley of the city of Dublin, spinster, during her life.

SPINSTRY, n. f. [spinn.] The work of spinning.

SPINX, adj. [spinn, Latin.] Thorny; briary; perplexed; difficult; troublesome.

The first attempts are always imperfect; much more in so difficult and spinn an affair as to force a subject.

SPINACLE, [spiraclum, Latin.] A breathing hole; a vent;
a small aperture.

Most of these spinacles perpetually send forth fire, more or less.

SPIRAL, adj. [spirale, Fr. from spira, Latin.] Curve; winding; circularly involved.

The process of the fibres in the ventricles, running in spiral lines from the tip to the base of the heart, shews that the fibule of the heart is a muscular contraction, as a purse is shut by drawing the strings contrary ways.

Why earth or sun diurnal stages keep?
In spiral tracks why through the zodiac creep? Blackmore.

The intestinal tube affects a straight, instead of a spiral cylinder.

SPIRALLY, adv. [spiral.] In a spiral form.

The fibres are composed of two orders of fibres running circularly or spirally from base to tip.

SPIKE, n. f. [spira, Latin; spira, Italian; spira, Swedish.]

1. A curve line; any thing wreathed or contorted; a curl; a twist; a wreath.

His head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spires, that on the grafs Floated redundant.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god,
Sublime on radiant spires he rode.

Air seems to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up.

2. Any thing growing up taper; a round pyramid, so called perhaps because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles, would be a spire; a steepie.

With gilt ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd.
He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he hath

10. Sentiment; perception.
You are too great to be by me gainfaid.
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shakespeare.
11. Eagerness; desire.
God has changed mens tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.
12. Man of activity; man of life, fire and enterprise.
The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakespeare.
13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.
Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I chuse for my judges. Dryden.
14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.
Though thou didst but jest
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare's King John.
- When I fit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
- Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern?
To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays. Dryden.
- By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed. Derham.
- In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains, Itself unseen, but in the effects remains. Pope.
- The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.
15. The likeness; essential qualities.
Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a defending light, which of all other doth set off mens faces in their truest spirit. Wotton.
16. Anything eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shakespeare.
17. That which hath power or energy.
All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain feats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon's Natural History.
18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation.
What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many differing things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.
- All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
- In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil; if it will, it is spirit. Arbutnot on Aliments.
19. It may be observed, that in the old poets spirit was commonly a monosyllable, being written spight or spight.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spight Commanded was. Spenser.
- To SPIRIT. v. a.
1. To animate or aduate as a spirit.
So talk'd the spirit'd fly snake. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. To excite; to animate; to encourage.
He will be faint in any execution of such a counsel, unless spirit'd by the unanimous decrees of a general diet. Temple.
- Civil dissensions never fail of introducing and spiriting the ambition of private men. Swift on the Cont. in Athens and Rome.
- Many officers and private men spirit up and assist those obstinate people to continue in their rebellion. Swift.
3. To draw; to entice.
In the southern coast of America, the southern point of the needle varieth toward the land, as being disposed and spirit'd that way, by the meridional and proper hemisphere. Brown.
- The ministry had him spirit'd away, and carried abroad as a dangerous person. Arbutnot and Pope.
- SPIRITALLY. adv. [from spiritus, Latin.] By means of the breath.
Conceive one of each pronounced spiritaly, the other vocally. Alder's Elements of Speech.
- SPIRITED. adj. [from spirit] Lively; vivacious; full of fire.

S P I

- Dryden's translation of Virgil is noble and spirited. Pope.
- SPIRITEDNESS. n. f. [from spirited.] Disposition or make of mind.
He showed the narrow spiritedness, pride, and ignorance of pedants.
- SPIRITFULNESS. n. f. [from spirit and full.] Sprightfulness; liveliness.
A cocks crowing is, a tone that corresponds to singing, attesting his mirth and spiritfulness. Harver.
- SPIRITLESS. adj. [from spirit] Dejected; low; deprived of vigour; wanting courage; depressed.
A man so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Priam's curtain. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- Of their wonted vigour left them drain'd, Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold ruth durst bravely die. Dryden.
- Art thou so base, so spiritless a slave?
Not so he bore the fate to which you doom'd him. Smith.
- SPIRITUOUS. adj. [from spirit.]
1. Refined; defecated; advanced near to spirit.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure.
As nearer to him plac'd, or nearer tending. Milton.
2. Fine; ardent; active.
SPIRITUOUSNESS. n. f. [from spirituous.] Fineness and activity of parts.
They, notwithstanding the great thinness and spirituousness of the liquor, did, before they broke, lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere. Boyle.
- SPIRITUAL. adj. [from spiritual, Fr. from spirit.]
1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.
Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound. Bacon.
- Both visibles and audibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species.
- All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first author of all beings, the only self-existent God.
2. Mental; intellectual.
The same disaster has invaded his spiritual; the passions rebel; and there are so many governors, that there can be no government. South.
3. Not gross; refined from external things; relative only to the mind.
Some who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God. Calamy's Sermon.
4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.
Place man in some public society, civil or spiritual. Hooker.
- You are revered,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Shakespeare.
- I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did. Shakespeare.
- Spiritual armour, able to resist Satan's assaults. Milton.
- The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of mens souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world. Swift.
- SPIRITUALITY. n. f. [from spiritual.]
1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.
If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtle and pure. Raleigh.
2. Intellectual nature.
A pleasure made for the soul; suitable to its spirituality, and equal to all its capacities.
3. [Spirituality, Fr.] Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul; mental refinement.
Many secret indispositions and aversions to duty will steal upon the soul, and it will require both time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispense it for the spiritualities of religion. South's Sermons.
4. That which belongs to any one as an ecclesiastick.
Of common rights, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities, during the vacancy of a bishoprick. Aylmer's Spirituality.
- SPIRITUALTY. n. f. [from spiritual.] Ecclesiastical body.
We of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time. Shakespeare.
- SPIRITUALIZATION. n. f. [from spiritualize.] The act of spiritualizing.
To SPIRITUALIZE v. a. [from spiritualize, Fr. from spirit.] To sanctify the intellect; to purify from the feculencies of the world.
This would take it much out of the care of the soul, to spiritualize and replenish it with good works. Hammond.

S P I

- We begin our survey from the lowest dregs of sense, and so ascend to our more spiritualized selves. Glanville.
- As to the future glory in which the body is to partake, that load of earth which now engages to corruption, must be calcined and spiritualized, and thus be clothed upon with glory. Decay of Piety.
- If man will act rationally, he cannot admit any competition between a momentary satisfaction, and an everlasting happiness, as great as God can give, and our spiritualized capacities receive. Keger's Sermon.
- SPIRITUALLY. adv. [from spiritual.] Without corporeal grossness; with attention to things purely intellectual.
In the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of holy Living.
- SPIRITUOUS. adj. [from spirituous, Fr. from spirit.]
1. Having the quality of spirit, tenuity and activity of parts.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As to him nearer tending. Milton.
- The most spirituous and most fragrant part of the plant exhales by the action of the sun. Arbutnot.
2. Lively; gay; vivid; airy.
It may appear airy and spirituous, and fit for the welcome of cheerful guests. Watson's Architecture.
- SPIRITUOSITY. n. f. [from spirituous.] The quality of being spirituous; sing spirituous; tenuity and activity.

Bottling of beer, while new and full of spirit, so that it spiriteth when the stopple is taken forth, maketh the drink more quick and windy. Bacon's Natural History.
- Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock, Spirts in the garden's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
- To SPIRIT. v. a. To throw out in a jet.
When weary Proteus
Retir'd for shelter to his wonted caves,
His funny flocks about their shepherd play,
And rowling round him, spirt the bitter sea. Dryden.
- When rains the passage hide,
Of the loose flocks spirt up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careless foot. Gay.
- To SPIRIT. v. a. [A corruption of spirt.] To dissipate.
The terraqueous globe would, by the centrifugal force of that motion, be soon dissipated and spirted into the circumambient space, was it not kept together by this noble contrivance of the Creator. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- SPIRIT. n. f. [from spirt.]
1. Pyramidal.
Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spirty firs, and shapely box adorn. Pope's Messiah.
- In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spirt turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.
2. Wreathed; curled.
Hid in the spirt volumes of the snake,
I lurk'd within the covert of a brake. Dryden.
- SPISS. adj. [from spissus, Latin.] Close; firm; thick.

You spurn'd me such a day. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
- The watry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakespeare.
- He spat on the ground, made clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man. John ix. 6.
- A maid came from her father's house to one of the tribunals of the Gentiles, and declaring herself a Christian, spit in the judge's face. South.
- A drunkard men abhor, and would even spit at him, were it not for fear he should somethine more than spit at them. South's Sermons.
- Spit on your finger and thumb, and pinch the snuff till the candle goes out. Swift's Rules for the Servants.
- SPIRITUAL. n. f. [Corrupted from spital.] A charitable foundation. In use only in the phrase, a spiritual sermon, and not the spittal.
- To SPITCHECOCK. v. a. To cut an eel in pieces and roast him.
Of this word I find no good etymology.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spit-beck'd eel. King.
- SPITE. n. f. [from spite, Dutch; despit, French.]
1. Malice; rancour; hate; malignity; malevolence.
This breeding rather spite than shame in her, or, if it were a shame, a shame not of the fault, but of the repulse, she did thirst for a revenge. Sidney.
- Bewray they did their inward boiling spite,
Each stirring others to revenge their cause. Daniel.
- Done all to spite
The great Creator; but their spite still serves His glory to augment. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Be gone, ye critics, and restrain your spite,
Codrus writes on, and will for ever write. Pope.
2. SPITE of, or IN SPITE of. Notwithstanding; in defiance of.
It is often used without any malignity of meaning.
Blessed be such a preacher, whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself. South.
- In spite of me I love, and see too late My mother's pride must find my mother's fate. Dryden.
- For thy lov'd sake, spite of my boding fears,
I'll meet the danger which ambition brings. Rowe.
- My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortune that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example, Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears. Addis. Cato.
- In spite of all applications the patient grew worse every day. Arbutnot.
- To SPITE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mischief; to treat maliciously; to vex; to thwart malignantly.
Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spighted, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee. Shakespeare.
- I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spight a raven's heart within a dove. Shakespeare.
2. To fill with spite; to offend.
So with play did he a good while fight against the fight of Zalmene, who, more spited with that courtesy, that one that did nothing should be able to resist her, burned away with choler any motions which might grow out of her own sweet disposition. Sidney.
- Darius, spited at the magi, endeavoured to abolish not only their learning but their language. Tem. le.
- SPIRITFUL. adj. [from spite and full.] Malicious; malignant.
The Jews were the deadliest and spirit-fullest enemies of Christianity that were in the world, and in this respect their orders to be thinned. Hooker.
- All you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son, Spightful and wrathful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- Contempt is a thing made up of an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South's Sermons.
- The spiteful stars have shed their venom down,
And now the peaceful planets take their turn. Dryden.
- 24 U

To the spittle go,
And from the powd'ring tub of infamy Fetch forth the lazar kite of Creffid's kind. Shaksp. H. V.
This is it

That makes the waned widow wed again;
She whom the spittle house, and ulcerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To th' April-day again. Shaksp. Timon.

Cure the spittle world of maladies. Cleveland.
SPI'TTLE, n. f. [from spittle, Saxon.] Moisture of the mouth.

The saliva or spittle is an humour of eminent use. Ray.
Menas and Atys in the mouth were bred,
And never hatch'd within the lab'ring head;
No blood from bitten nails those poems drew,
But charn'd like spittle from the lips they flew. Dryden.

The spittle is an active liquor, immediately derived from the arterial blood: it is saponaceous. Arbutnot.

A genius for all stations fit,
Whose ingent talent is his wit;
His heart too great, though fortune little,
To lick a rascal statesman's spittle. Swift.

SPI'TVENOM, n. f. [from spit and venom.] Poison ejected from the mouth.

The spitvenom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the

And splashfoot verse remain'd, and will remain. Pope.

SPLAYMOUTH, n. f. [from splay and mouth.] Mouth widened by delign.

All authors to their own defects are blind:
Had'st thou but Janus-like a face behind,
To see the people when splaymouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden.

SPLEEN, n. f. [from splen, Latin.]

1. The milt; one of the viscera, of which the use is scarcely known. It is supposed the seat of anger and melancholy.

If the wound be on the left hypochondrium, under the short ribs, you may conclude the spleen wounded. Wijeman.

2. Anger; spite; ill-humour.

If the milt teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart distast'd torment to her. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Kind pity checks my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue, which swell my eye-lids.
All envy'd, but the Theban brethren show'd
The least respect; and thus they vent their spleen aloud:
Lay down those honour'd spoils. Donne.

In noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and four disdain. Pope.

3. A fit of anger.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And, ere a man hath power to say, behold!
I he jaws of darkness do devour it up. Shaksp. Hamlet.

4. Melancholy; hypochondriacal vapours.

Spleen, vapours, and small-pox above them all. Pope.

of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A spring of bays in fifty years;
While ev'ry fool his claim alledges,
As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG. n. s.
In perpendicular affires, chrysalis is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other terminating gradually, till it terminates in a point:
this is called by lapidaries spring or rock chrysalis. Woodward.

SPRIG. n. s. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [Contraction of spirit, spiritus, Latin: it was anciently written sprete or sprete; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprete, and its derivatives spretely, spretful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.
She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words to wife do make their way,
To bear the message of her spring. Spenser.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread,
Legions of spring, the which like little flies,
Flur'ring about his ever-damned head,
Await whereto their service he applies. Fairy Queen.

While with heav'nly charity the spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves received the guilty spring. Dryden.

Of these am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful spring. Pope.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.
The ideas of goblins and springts have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.
O chastity, the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my springts:
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly,
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow.
We had in use for sea fight short arrows called springts, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History.

To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a springt. A ludicrous use.
I am springht with a fool. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

SPRIGHFUL. adj. [from spring and full.] Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.—
Spoke like a springhtful noble gentleman. Shakespeare.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating,
At sight of thee, and bound with springhtful joys. Otway.

SPRIGHFULLY. adv. [from springhtful.] Briskly; vigorously.
Norfolk, springhtfully and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakep.
SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from springhtly.] Liveliness; briskness;
vigour; gaiety; vivacity.

The soul is clogged when the ads in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but in dreams, observe with what a springhtliness and alacrity does the exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from springhtly.] Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,
And springhtly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the springhtly trumpet, from afar,
Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a springhtly lay:
Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day. Prior.

The springhtly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

To SPRING. v. n. Preterite spring or spring, anciently spring.
[springan, Sax. springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground and grow by vegetative power.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.

To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth. Jeb xxxviii. 27.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that spring up and encreased. Mark iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy fields
The thistle *spring*s, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.
That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not spring, are effects of providence. Rey.

3. To proceed as from seed.
Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves;
and in the second year that which springeth of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.
Had't thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had spring like summer flies. Shakespeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm with *spring*s mutual from the heart. Pope.

5. To arise; to appear.
When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.
To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is spring up. Math. iv. 16.

6. To issue with effect or force.
Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn;
Oh spring to light: auspicious babe be born. Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he *spring*s of;
The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Our Lord spring out of Judea. Leb. vii. 14.

All these
Shall, like the brethren spring of dragon's teeth, Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. Ben. Jonson.

Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus

Thus to their gods, each then ally'd his name,
This spring from Jove, and that from Titan came. Grav.
8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.
They found new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, spring from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Do not blast my springing hopes Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe.
9. To grow; to thrive.
What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
10. To bound; to leap; to jump.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; 'tis Spring out into fast gait, then stops again. Shak. H. VIII.
Spring not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shaksp.
He called for a light, and spring in and fell before Paul. Adis.
When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;
Then spring the forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.
Afraid to sleep;
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She spring from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Spring up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.
See, aw'd by heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain flags, that spring
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his courser;
That mountain flag would Vanoe rather be,
Than be a slave. Philips's Briten.
11. To fly with elastic power.
A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that spring. Mortimer's Husbandry.
12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damnd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Oruay.
A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.
13. To issue from a fountain.
Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Gen. xxvi. 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Rescomm.
14. To proceed as from a source.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: 'tis for you
To fit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.
Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Spring thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:
'The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.
The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the furling flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appeared. Pope.

TO SPRING. v. a.
1. To start; to rouse game.
Thus I reclatid my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawners use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and dye,
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That spring the game you were to set,
Before you had time to draw the net. Hudibras.
A large cock-phasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.
Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character,
I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.
See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he *spring*s the prey. Gay.

2. To produce light.
The nurse, surpriz'd with fright,
Starts and leaves her bed, and *spring*s a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more;
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light,
And reason saw not, 'till faith spring the light. Dryden.
He that has such a burning zeal, and *spring*s such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting a plank.
People discharge themselves of burdensome reflection, as of the cargo of a ship that has spring a leak. L'Estrange.
No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town;
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.

Whether the spring a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overlet with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.
4. To discharge a mine.
Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have spring divers others which did little execution. Tatler.
I spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown.
Addison's Spectator.

5. To contrive as a sudden expedient; to offer unexpectedly.
The friends to the cause spring a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear 'till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the pretender. Swift.

6. To produce hastily.
7. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.
Unbecoming still
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.
SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants spring and vegetate; the vernal season.
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his music, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting Spring. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
The Spring vilteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Cavau.

Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.
2. An elastic body; a body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.
This may be better performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Mason's Mach. Exp.
He that was sharp sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastic force.
Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow! Dryd.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another; impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.
In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbuthnot.
4. Any active power; any cause by which motion is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.
Nature is the fame, and man is the same; has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author thuns by vulgar *spring*s to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love. Pope's Prel. to Cato.
5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.
The prisoner with a spring from prison broke:
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Add. Cat. 6. A.

6. A leak; a start of plank.
Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails,
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em.
Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.
Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell to much the higher by their ebb. Shaksp. H. VI.
*Spring*s on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When in th' effects sue doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below:
These things the views without the body's eyes. Davies.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.
Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephew's fates. Dry.
He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of Winter. Locke.
The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.
To that great spring, which doth great kingdoms move,
The sacred spring, whence right and honour streams;
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Davies.
I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know,
Though now I am, I was not always so:
Then that from which I was, must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.
He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.
About the spring of the day Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Sa. ix. 26.
10. Course; original.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.
Spring. adv. [from the noun.] With elastic vigour.
Before the bull the pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning teal about his head did move.
As in their fire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.

Spring. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which fastened to any elastic body catches by a spring or jerk.
As a woodcock to my own spring, Offick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakspere's Hamlet.
Let goats for food their loaded udders lend;
But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With hairy *spring*s we the birds betray,
Slight flocks of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

Springer. n. f. [from spring.] One who rouses game.
Springiness. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.
Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow, since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.
Springhalt. n. f. [from spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.
They've all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Springtide. n. f. [from spring and tide.] Tide at the new moon;
high tide.
Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again;
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Dryd. Tyrannick Love.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon a springtide. Grew's Cyclol.
Springle. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; an elastic noose.
Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plait-shoot stretch for springles to take them. Carew.

TO SPRINGLE. v. n. Misprinted, I suppose, for springle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Walks it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shaksp. Tim. n of Audent.

SPRING. adv. [from spring.]
1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.
Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackm. Creation.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.
Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbuthnot.
If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley's Sermon.

2. [From spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.
Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO SPRINKLE. v. a. [from spring, Dutch.]
1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.
Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven. Ex. ix. 8.
2. To scatter in drops.
Sprinkle water of purifying upon them. Num. viii. 7.

3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by sprinkling.
Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Heb.
Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold. Milton.
The prince, with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door, Possess'd the porch. Dryden's En.

TO SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.
The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger. Lev. xiv.
Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water. Calist's Paragon.
When dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd fash, and scrub the floors, Know Saturday appears. Gay's Trivia.

TO SPRIT. v. a. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirt.
Toads sometimes exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.
TO SPRIT. v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To shoot; to germinate; to sprout.

Sprits. n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.
The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or spirt at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Spritsail. n. f. [from spirt and sail.] The sail which belongs to the bolt-sprit-mast. Ditt.
Our men quitted themselves of the fireship, by cutting the spirt sail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wifeman.

Sprits. n. f. [Contracted from spirt.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.
The spirts of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.
Sprightly. adv. [See SPRIGHTFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.
The Grecians sprightly drew from the darts the corse,
And heart it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliad.

SPRING. The preterite of spring. Obsolete.
Not mistrusting, 'till these new curiosities spring up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.
TO SPROUT. v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.]
1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.
That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon's Natural History.
We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green. Dryden.
Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood:
For phytick some, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.
Envy'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top the proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

SPU

- Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. To shoot into ramifications. Bacon.
3. To grow.
- Th' enliv'ning dust its head begins to rear,
And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickell.
- SPROUT*. n. f. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.
- Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.
- Early ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassell'd horn Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.
- To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.
- SPRUCE*. adj. [Skinner derives this word from pruces, French; prout, Cajaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came pruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance.
- The tree
That wags that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
- Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou do'st meet. Donne.
- Along the crisp'd shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund Spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.
- I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practis'd by many chymists.
- He put his hand and beard in order,
The sprucer to accolt and board her. Hudibras.
- He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.

Dreams are toys
Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be square'd by this. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

How frankly I square my talk!
Thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And square'th thy life accordingly. Shakespeare.

God has designed us a measure of our undertakings; his word and law, by the proportions whereof we are to square our actions. Decay of Piety.

SQU

The oracle was enforced to proclaim Socrates to be the wisest man in the world, because he applied his studies to the moral part, the squaring men's lives. Hammond.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught;
For this by rules severe his life he square'd,
That all might see the doctrine which they heard. Dryden.

This must convince all such who have, upon a wrong interpretation, presumed to square opinions by theirs, and have in loud exclamations shewn their abhorrence of university education. Swift.

5. To accommodate; to fit.
Eye me, blest providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength. Milton.

6. To respect in quartile.
O'er libra's sign a crowd of foes prevails,
The icy goat and crab that square the scales. Creech.

Some professions can equally square themselves to, and thrive under all revolutions of government. South's Sermons.

To SQUARE, v. n.
1. To suit with; to fit with.
I set them by the rule, and, as they square,
Or deviate from undoubted doctrine, fare. Dryden.

His description squares exactly to time. Woodward.
These marine bodies do not square with those opinions, but exhibit phenomena that thwart them. Woodward.

2. To quarrel; to go to opposite sides. Obsolete.
Are you such fools
To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should speed! Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

But they do square, that all their elves for fear
Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there. Shakespeare.

SQUARENESS, n. f. [from square.] The state of being square. This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight lines, and try the squareness of their work. Mason.

Motion, squareness, or any particular shape, are the accidents of body. Watts's Logick.

SQUASH, n. f. [from quash.]
1. Any thing soft and easily crushed.
Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before it is a peacock, or a coddling, when it is almost an apple. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. [Metaphor.] A plant.
The characters are, it hath the whole appearance of a pumpkin or gourd; from which this differs in its fruit, which is roundish, fleshy, streaked, angular, and for the most part divided into five partitions, inclosing flat seeds adhering to a spongy placenta. Miller.

Squash is an Indian kind of pumpkin that grows apace. Boyle.

3. Any thing unripe; any thing soft. In contempt.
How like I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. A sudden fall.
Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them. Arbutnot.

5. A shock of soft bodies.
My fall was stopped by a terrible squash that founded louder than the cataract of Niagara. Gulliver's Travels.

To SQUASH, v. a. To crush into pulp.
To SQUAT, v. n. [from quattare, Italian.] To sit cowering; to sit close to the ground.

SQUAT, adj. [from the verb.]
1. Cowering; close to the ground.
Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve. Milton.

Her dearest comrades never caught her Squat on her hams. Swift.

2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and cowering.
The squill-infest is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat. Grew.

Alma in verse, in prose, the mind,
By Aristotle's pen defin'd,
Throughout the body squat or tall,
Is bonâ fide, all in all. Prior.

SQUAT, n. f.
1. The posture of cowering or lying close.
A stitch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw;
Such wrinkles as a skillful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

2. A sudden fall.
Bruises, squats and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate. Herbert.

SQUAT, n. f. A sort of mineral.
The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated. Woods.

To SQUAKE, v. n. [from squaka, Swedish.]
1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.
2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.

The flaccid dand
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakespeare.

SQU

- Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.
I see the new Arion sail.
The lute still trembling underneath thy nail;
At thy well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the baces roar. Dryden.
Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.
Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch? Addison.
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher pow'rs think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark fatyr. Pope.
In florid impotence he speaks.
And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.
Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope's Odyssey.
3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.
If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden's Den Schaffian.
SQUEAK. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs:
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts wou'd break. Dryden.
To SQUEAL. v. n. [squæla, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squæla a cry continued.
SQUEAMISH. adj. [for squeamish or qualmish, from qualm.]
Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.
Yet, for countenance sake, he seem'd very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the prince's Pamela. Sidney.
Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
That takes a basting for a blemish;
For what's more honourable than fears,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars? Hudibras.
His musick is rustick, and perhaps too plain,
The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.
It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.
South.
There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely considers his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke.
SQUEAMISHNESS. n. f. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy;
fastidiousness.
The thorough-pac'd politician must presently laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture. South's Sermons.
Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach. Stillingfleet.
To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Swift.
To SQUEEZE. v. a. [cpayan, Saxon; ys-gwynfu, Welsh.]
1. To press; to crush between two bodies.
It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing. Willms.
The sinking of the earth would make an extraordinary convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.
When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand? Pope.
2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.
In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Estrange.
3. To force between close bodies.
To SQUEEZE. v. n.
1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.
A concave sphere of gold fill'd with water and folder'd up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.
What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezing of the brain. Pope.
2. To force way through close bodies.
Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has

SQU

- crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. L'Estrange.
To SQUEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.
A subtle artifice stands with wondrous bag,
That bears impitied winds, of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enfold'd:
Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly.
Melodious, and with sprightly accents charm. Philips.
SQUELCH. n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.
He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd. Hudibras.
So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away
he scampers, bawling like mad. L'Estrange.
SQUIN. n. f. [schielen, German, to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]
The armada at Calais, fir Walter Raleigh was wont pre-tily to say, were suddenly driven away with squins, for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manœuvr'd, and sent upon them. Bacon's War with Spain.
The forest of the south, compareth the French valour to a squill, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Huvel's Vocal Forest.
Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze;
But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Waller.
Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.
2. Any petty fellow.
Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser.
The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Zotter.
SQUILL. n. f. [scilla, scilla, Latin; scille, Fr.]
1. A plant.
It hath a large acid bulbous root like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves. Miller.
Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself. Bacon's Natural History.
'Twill down like oxymel of squills.
The self same atoms
Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;
And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste. Garrh.
2. A fish.
3. An insect.
The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat. Greav.
SQUINANCE. n. f. [quinquies, quinquies, Fr. quinquies, Italian.]
An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.
It is used for quinquies and inflammations of the throat;
whereby it cometh to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.
Bacon's Natural History.
In a quinquies there is danger of suffocation.
Wifeman.
SQUINT. adj. [squinte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.
Where an equal poise of hope and fear Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion. Milton.
To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.
Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, as affecting to see the light, and so induce squinting.
Bacon's Natural History.
Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it. Pope.
To SQUINT. v. a.
1. To form the eye to oblique vision.
This is the foul Flibbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakespeare.
2. To turn the eye obliquely.
Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary. Bacon's Henry VII.
SQUINTEYED. adj. [squint and eye.]
1. Having the sight directed obliquely.
He was so squinteyed, that he seem'd spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld. Kneller's History of the Turks.
2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.
This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon your fears. Denham.
SQUINTING. adj. Squinting. A cant word.
The timbrel and the squinting maid
Of his awe thee; left the gods for sin,
Should, with a swelling droply stuff thy skin. Dryden.

STA

- To SQUIN. v. n. To look asquint. A cant word.
I remember thine eyes well enough:
Do'st thou squint at me? Shakespeare's King Lear.
SQUIRE. n. f. [Contraction of esquire; esquier, French. See ESQUIRE.]
1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.
He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire. Shakespeare.
The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood. Shakespeare's Henry V.
2. An attendant on a noble warrior.
Old Bates form he took, Anchises' squire Dryden's Entid.
Now left to rule Afanius.
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.
3. An attendant at court.
Return with her—
I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
To keep bare life a-foot. Shakespeare's King Lear.
SQUIRREL. n. f. [sciurellus, French; sciurus, Latin.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.
One chane'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel.
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Drayton.
To SQUIRT. v. a. To throw out in a quick stream. Of uncertain etymology.
Sir Roger the mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he pass'd along. Arbutnot.
To SQUIRT. v. n. To spout; to let fly. Low cant.
You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister. L'Estrange.
SQUIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.
He with his squirt-fire cou'd disperse Whole troops. Hudibras.
There is war declared by a lord; his weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Pope.
2. A small quick stream.
Water thofe with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water. Bacon's Natural History.
SQUIRTER. n. f. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.
The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble. Arbutnot.
To STAB. v. a. [staven, old Dutch.]
1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.
Bet lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Write to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stab'd by the self same hand that made these wounds. Shak.
Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in cloister war;
But in fair combat fight. Dryden's Knights Tale.
Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing. Locke.
Porous, think, thou fect thy dying brother
Stab'd at his heart, and all belmeard with blood, Storming at thee! Addison's Cat.
2. To wound mortally or mischievously.
He speaks poyards, and every word stabs. Shakespeare.
What tears will then be shed!
Then, to compleat her woes, will I espouse Hermione.—'twill stab her to the heart! A. Philip.
STAB. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A stab or wound with a sharp pointed weapon.
The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs Kill the still closing waters. Shakespeare.

derer.
STABILIMENT. n. f. [from stabilis, Latin.] Support; firmness; act of making firm.
They serve for stabiliment, propagation and shade. Derham.

STA

- STABILITY*. n. f. [stabilitas, Fr. from stabilis, Latin.]
1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.
By the same degrees that either of these happen, the sta- bility of the figure is by the same lessened. Temple.
These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground
Break not the pillars. Blackmore.
He began to try
This and that hanging stone's stability. Cotton.
2. Fixedness; not fluidity.
Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this,
that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.
3. Firmness of resolution.
STABLE. adj. [stabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.]
1. Fixed; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.
2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.
If man would be unvariable,
He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;
For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a fall more desperate than we. Davies.
He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
Subject to change. Dryden's Knights Tale.
3. Strong; fixed in state.
This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what tomorrow might deprive us of. Regent's Sermons.
STABLE. n. f. [stabilis, Latin.] A house for beasts.
I will make Rabbah a stable for camels. Ezra xxv. 5.
To STABLE. v. n. [stabilis, Latin.] To kennel; to dwell as beasts.
In their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd. Milton.
And stable.
STABLEBOY. n. f. [stable and boy, or man.] One who attends in the stable.
As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy. Swift.
If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stablemen and the scullion to stand in his way. Swift's Directions to the Butler.
I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine;
I would care for some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Brayton.
STABLENESS. n. f. [from stable.]
1. Power to stand.
2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.
The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Bounty, perseverance, have no reliq of them. Shakespeare.
STABLESTAND. n. f. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convicted to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest; and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip. Cowel.
I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife, I'll go in couple with her. Shakespeare.
To STABILISH. v. a. [estabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.] To establish; to fix; to settle.
Then she began a treaty to procure,
And stabilish terms betwixt both their requests. Fairy Queen.
Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stabilish quietness on ev'ry side. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
Comfort your hearts, and stabilish you in every good work. 2 Thess. ii. 17.
Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to stabilish dangerous constancy;
But I have told them, since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who've false to you. Donne.
His covenant (sworn)
To David, stabilish'd as the days of heav'n. Milton.
STACK. n. f. [stacca, Italian.]
1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.
Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there. Bacon's Natural History.
While the marquis and his servant on foot were chasing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol. Wotton's Buckingham.
While the cock
To the stack or the barn-door
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.
Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation. Newton.
An inundation, says the fable,
O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.
2. A.

STA

2. A number of chimneys or funnels standing together.
A mason making a stack of chimneys, the foundation of the house funk. Wifeman's Surgery.
To STACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To pile up regularly in ricks.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stack on the pease. Tusser.
The prices of stacking up of wood I shall give you. Mort.
STACKS. n. f. An aromatick; the gum that distills from the tree which produces myrrh.
Take sweet spices, stacte, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.
STADLE. n. f. [trabel, Saxon, a foundation.]
1. Any thing which serves for support to another.
2. A staff; a crutch.
He cometh on, his weak steps governing
And aged limbs on cypress stade stout,
And with an ivy twine his waist is girt about. Fa. Queen.
3. A tree suffered to grow for coarse and common uses, as posts or rails. Of this meaning I am doubtful.
Leave growing for staddles the likeliest and best,
Though seller and buyer dispatched the rest. Tusser.
Coppice-woods, if you leave in them staddles too thick, will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bac.
To STADLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with staddles.
First fee it well fenced, ere hewers begin;
Then fee it well staddled without and within. Tusser.
STADTHOLDER. n. f. [Stadt and houden, Dutch.] The chief magistrate of the United Provinces.
STAFF. n. f. plur. staves. [træp, Saxon; staff, Danish; staf, Dutch.]
1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.
It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chaffinements,
That thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. K. Charles.
Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle,
Should now throw away his staff, out of fear of a dog. Broome.
2. A prop; a support.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts. Shakespeare.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shak.
3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hired to bear their staves. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He that bought the skin ran greater rike than t'other that fold it, and had the worse end of the staff. L'Estrange.
With forks and staves the felon they pursue. Dryden.
4. Any long piece of wood.
He forthwith from the glittering staff unfur'd
Th' imperial ensign.
To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A fork staff we dextrously apply'd,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scooped out the big round gelly from its orb. Addison.
5. An ensign of an office; a badge of authority.
Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
All his officers brake their staves; but at their return new staves were delivered unto them. Hayward on Edward VI.
6. [Staf, Hlandick.] A stanza; a series of verses regularly disposed, so as that, when the stanza is concluded, the same order begins again.
Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being all too lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is free from constraint, he affects half verses. Dryden.
STAFFISH. adj. [from staff.] Stiff; harsh. Obsolete.
A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, knotty, and lumpish, but hard, tough, and though somewhat staffish, both for learning and whole course of living, proveth always best. Ascham.
STAFFETREE. n. f. A fort of ever green privet.
STAG. n. f. [Of this word I find no derivation.] The male red deer; the male of the hind.
To the place a poor sequestred stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare. As you like it.
The swift stag from under ground Bore up his branching head. Milton.
Th' inhabitants of fens and skies shall change,
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range. Dryden.
The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.
STAGLE. n. f. [stages, French.]
1. A floor raised to view on which any show is exhibited.
2. The theatre; the place of scenic entertainments.
And much good do't you then,
Erave plush and velvet men:

STA

- Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben. Jonson.
Those two Mytilene brethren, bafely born, crept out at a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryden.
One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome.
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.
Among slaves, who exercised polite arts, none fold so dear as stage players or actors. Arbutnot on Cato.
3. Any place where any thing is publicly transacted or performed.
When we are born, we cry that we are come To this great stage of fools. Shakespeare. King Lear.
4. A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission. [Statio, Latin.]
I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and beseech you to go before me my guide. Hammond's Pract. Catch.
Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Add.
From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her latest stage. Prior.
By opening a passage from Mulcovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker.
5. A single step of gradual process.
The changes and vicissitude in wars are many; but chiefly in the feats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon's Essays.
We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atterbury.
To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline.
The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp's Surgery.
To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publicly.
Out of use.
I love the people;
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
The quick comedians
Extremely will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
STAGECOACH. n. f. [stage and coach.] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.
The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.
When late their miry fides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.
STAGEPLAY. n. f. [stage and play.] Theatrical entertainment.
This rough-cast unheven poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

You safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben. Jonson.
2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner;
a person of cunning.
I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, fools for argument use wagers. Hudibras.
One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot. L'Estrange.
Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport:
But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,
Would never fix his thoughts, but trim his time away. Dryden.
One cries out, these stagers
Come in good time to make more work for wagers. Dryden.
Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,
You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors. Swift.
STAGEVIL. n. f. A diseafe in horses. Dict.

Strange odds! where crackling drunkards must engage
An hungry foe. Tate's Juvenal.
The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory. Arbutnot.
2. To faint; to begin to give way.
The enemy stagers: if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength. Addison.
3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.
A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shak.
He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief;
but was strong in faith. Rom. iv. 20.
Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger. Bacon.
No heretics desire to spread
Their light opinions, like these Epicures;
For so their staggering thoughts are comforted;
And other means allent their doubt allures. Davies.
If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God. Hammer.
But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falloose shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'll prop myself within. Dryden.
To STAGGER. v. a.

Into the stagers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance. Shak. All's well that ends well.
STAGNANCY. n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.
STAGNANT. adj. [stagnans, Latin.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.
What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat. Blackm.
'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant. Woodward.
Immur'd and buifed in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.
To STAGNATE. v. n. [stagnum, Latin.] To lye motionless; to have no course or stream.
The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up. Woodw.
The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows. Arbutnot.
Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate. Thomson.
STAGNATION. n. f. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion.
As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time. Addison.
To what great ends subservient is the wind?
Behold, where clear this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the fumes:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore's Creation.
STAGN. participial adjective. [from stag.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.
Put thyself
Into a humour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my stagnant senses. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black stagnant wisdom's hue. Milton.
I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the Spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds;
but to ride out, with prudent and stagnant guides, to all the quarters of the land. Milton on Education.

His armour stain'd, ere while so bright. Milton.
Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more;
Nor stain your country with your children's gore. Dryden.
2. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.
Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.
STAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Blot; spot; discoloration.
Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains;
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden's Zen.
We no where meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun; which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that they themselves in clouds of a different situation. Addison.
Swift trout diversify'd with crimson stains,
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.
2. Taint of guilt or infamy.
To solemn actions of royalty and justice their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shakespeare.
STAIR. n. f. [trægen, Saxon; stige, Dutch.] Steps by which we rise an ascent from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps;
but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.
A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible. Sidney.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs Shakespeare.
That mount the Capitol. Shakespeare.
I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high. Bacon's Essays.
Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder. Bacon.
There being good stairs at either end, they never went through each other's quarters. Clarendon.
The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Satan now on the lower stair,
That scalp'd by steps of gold to heav'n gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Trembling he springs
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor stair for stairs; but down the depth he threw
His body: on his back the door he drew. Dryden.
STAIRCASE. n. f. [stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

STAKE. n. f. [staca, Saxon; staeck, Dutch; staca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.
The more I staked the stake, which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.
His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.
Sidney.
Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp *stake*s, plucked out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground.
In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small *stake*s, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice.
Shakep. Henry VI.
Bacon's Natural History.

Or sharpen *stake*s, or head the forks, or twine
The fallow twigs to tie the fraggling vine.
2. A piece of wood.
While he whirl'd in fiery circles round
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound.
Dryden.

3. Any thing placed as a palisade or fence.
That hollow I should know: what are you, speak?
Come not too near, you fall on iron *stake*s else.
4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.
We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies.
Shakep. Jul. Caesar.
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think?
Shak. Twelfth Night.

5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it has this meaning.
'Tis time short pleasure now to take,
Of little life the best to make,
And manage wisely the last stake.
O then, what interest shall I make
To save my last important stake,
When the most just have cause to quake!
He ventures little for to great a stake.
Th' increasing found is borne to either shore,
And for their *stake*s the throwing nations fear.
The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and when some others came up, you laid down.
Milton.
Arbutnot.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.
When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it.
Bacon's Henry VII.
Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
Enough at once to lie at stake,
For cov'nant and the cause's sake?
Of my crown thou too much care do'st take.
That which I value more, my love's at stake.
Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventured a good share of his fortune? At every moment Cato's life's at stake.
Dryden.
Addison's Cato.

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the work-bench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom let into some place of the work-bench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch.
Maxon's Mech. Exerc.

TO STAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.
Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour.
Boyle's Calendar.

2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.
Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they play'd for themselves.
South.

Persons, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution.
Addison.
They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations.
Addison.

I'll stake you' lamb that near the fountain plays,
And from the brink his dancing shade surveys.
Pope.

Provided our landlord's principles were found, we did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions.
TO STALK. v. n. [staelan, Saxon.]
1. To walk with high and superb steps. It is used commonly in a sense of dislike.
His monstrous enemy
With sturdy steps came stalking in his sight.
Shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we challenge'd it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession?
Unfold th' eternal door:
You see before the gate what stalking ghost
Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post.
Bertran.

STALK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. High, proud, wide, and stately step.
Behind it forth there leapt
An ugly fiend, more foul than dismal day;
The which with monstrous stalk behind him leapt.

1. Consisting of threads.
2. Staminate flowers.
Stamineus flowers are so far imperfect as to want those coloured leaves which are called petals, and consist only of the stylus and the stamina; and such plants as do bear these stami- neous flowers Ray makes to constitute a large genus of plants:
these he divides into such as, first, have their fruit or seed totally divided from the flower; and these are such plants as are said to be of different sexes: the reason of which is, that from the said seed some plant shall arise with flowers and no fruit, and others with fruit and no flowers; as hops, hemp, flinging

Pressing to be employ'd.
They pass their precious hours in plays and sports,
Till death behind came stalking on unseen.
With manly mien he stalk'd along the ground;
Nor wanted voice bely'd, nor vaunting found.
Then stalking through the deep
He fords the ocean, while the topmost wave Scarcely reaches up his middle side.
'Tis not to stalk about, and draw fresh air
From time to time.
Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days,
Stalk'd through my gardens, and purf'd my ways,
Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Pri.
Scornful turning from the shore
My haughty step, I stalk'd the valley o'er.
2. To walk behind a talking horse or cover.
The king asked how far it was to a certain town: they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he; for yonder town is shy, and flies me.
STALK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. High, proud, wide, and stately step.
Behind it forth there leapt
An ugly fiend, more foul than dismal day;
The which with monstrous stalk behind him leapt.
And ever as he went due watch upon him kept.

Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks.
2. [Stalk, Dutch.] The stem on which flowers or fruits grow.
A rock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stick, put into a sleep glad full of quicksilver, so that the quicksilver cover it; after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.
Small store will serve, where store,
All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk.
That amber attracts not ball is wholly repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped unto small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics,

There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete. Pope.
4. To fix a mark by impressing it.
Out of mere ambition, you have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shakespeare.
These prodigious conceits in nature spring out of framing abstracted conceptions, instead of those easy and primary notions which nature stamps alike in all men of common sense.
Digby on Bodies.
There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience. South's Sermons.
No constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind, which hath this notion of a deity born with it, and stamp'd upon it; or is of such a frame, that in the free use of itself it will find out God. Tillotson.
Though God has given us no innate ideas of himself, though he has stamp'd no original characters on our minds, wherein we may read his being; yet having furnished us with those faculties our minds are endowed with, he hath not left himself without witnesses.
Can they perceive the impressions from things without, and be at the same time ignorant of those characters which nature herself has taken care to stamp within? Locke.
What titles had they had, if nature had not Strove hard to thrust the worst deserving first,
And stamp'd the noble mark of eldership Upon their baser metal? Rexue's Ambitious Stepmother.
What an unspeakable happiness would it be to a man engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, if he had but a power of stamping his best sentiments upon his memory in indelible characters? Watts.
5. To make by impressing a mark.
If two penny weight of silver, marked with a certain impression, shall here in England be equivalent to three penny weight marked with another impression, they will not fail to stamp pieces of that fashion, and quickly carry away your silver. Locke.
6. To mint; to form; to coin.
We are bastards all;
And that most venerable man, which I did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
To STAMP. v. n. To strike the foot suddenly downward.
What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, to stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? Shakespeare.
The men shall howl at the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses. Jer. xlvii. 3.
There is such an echo among the old ruins and vaults, that, if you stamp but a little louder than ordinary, you hear the sound repeated. Addison's Spectator.

9. Solemn pomp; appearance of greatness.
When in triumphant state the British mufe,
True to herself, shall barb'rous aid refuse.
There kings receiv'd the marks of foreign pow'r:
In state the monarchs march'd, the listers bore
The awful axes and the rods before. Dryden's Æn.
Let my attendants wait: I'll be alone,
Where least of state, where most of love is shown. Dryden.
To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state. Collier.
At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.
 10. Dignity; grandeur.
She intrusted him how he should keep state, and yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes. Bacon's Henry VII.
The swan rows her state with oary feet.

The scavengers that sweep states nufances,
And are themselves the greatest. Dryden's Cleopatra.
I am accus'd of reflecting upon great states-folks. Swift.
- TO STATE. v. a. [consistat, French.]
1. To settle; to regulate.
This is so stated a rule, that all casuists press it in all cases of damage. Decay of Piety.
This is to state accounts, and looks more like merchandise than friendship. Collier of Friendship.
He is capable of corruption who receives more than what is the stated and unquestion'd fee of his office. Albion.
2. To represent in all the circumstances of modification.
Many other inconveniences are consequent to this stating of this question; and particularly that, by those which thus state it, there hath never yet been assigned any definite number of fundamentals. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Its present state stateth it to be what it now is. Hale.
Were our case stat'd to any sober heathen, he would never guess why they who acknowledge the necessity of prayer, and confess the same God, may not ask in the same form. Decay of Piety.
To state it fairly, imitation is the most advantageous way for a translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the memory of the dead. Dryden.
I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text. Atterbury.
- STATELINESS. n. f. [from stateli.]
1. Grandeur; majestic appearance; august manner; dignity.
We may collect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious remainders of it now, and guess at the stateliness of the building by the magnificence of its ruins. South.
For stateliness and majesty what is comparable to a horse?
Mare's Antidote against Albion.
2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.
She hated stateliness; but wisely knew What just regard was to her title due. Battersea.
- STATELY. adj. [from state.]
1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestic; magnificent.
A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was. Shak. Hen. VI.

To seem a statesman. Ben. Johnson's Epist.
The corruption of a poet is the generation of a stateli
man. Pope.
2. One employed in publick affairs.
If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Shak. Othello.
It is a weakness which attends high and low; the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South's Sermons.
A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify, since, to use the phrase of a state, many the pasture is not large enough. Albion.

- Here Britain's statemen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.
- STATSWOMAN. n. f. [from state and woman.] A woman who meddles with publick affairs. In contempt.
How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh fums: she's a great statswoman! B. Johnson.
Several objects may innocently be ridiculed, as the passions of our statswomen. Albion.
- STATICAL. adj. [from the noun.] Relating to the science of weighing.
A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of Winter, according to experience, and the statistical aphorisms of Sanetorius. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If one by a statistical engine could regulate his insensible perspiration, he might often, by restoring of that, foresee, prevent, or shorten a fit of the gout. Arbuthnot in Diet.
- STATISTICS. n. f. [from statique, Fr.] The science which considers the weight of bodies.
This is a catholic rule of statistics, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom; and if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part be equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.
- STATION. n. f. [from statio, French; statio, Latin.]
1. The act of standing.
Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings unto that purpose on those days had the names of stations given them. Hosker.
 2. A state of rest.
All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 3. A place where any one is placed.
In station like the herald, Mercury,
New-lighted on a heav'n-kissing hill. Shakep. Timon.
The sedulous remained within their station, which, by reason of the malignity of the deadly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.
The planets in their station list'ning stood.
To single stations now what years belong.
With planets join'd, they claim another song. Cricht.
 4. Post assigned; office.
Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their station to guard the place. Milton.
 5. Situation; position.
The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station and an even plain;
While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive-tide is crown'd? Prior.
 6. Employment; office.
No member of a political body so mean, but it may be useful in some station or other. LeStrange.
They believe that the common size of human understanding is fitted to some station or other. Swift.
Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of insinuation, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute. South.
 7. Character; state.
Far the greater part have kept their station. Milton.
 8. Rank; condition of life.
I can be contented with an humbler station in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.
- TO STATION. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a certain post, rank, or place.
The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Brown.
Between the descent and ascent, where the image seem'd stationary, I stopp'd the prison, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more. Newton's Opt.
- STATIONER. n. f. [from station.]
1. A bookseller.
Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.
With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
Glory and gain th' industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle dulness ever loves a joke. Pope's Dunciad.
2. A seller of paper.
STATIONERY. n. f. [from station.] A stationer; a politician; one skilled in government.
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair; and labour'd much
How to forget that learning. Shakep. Hamlet.
I do believe,
Statist though I am none, nor like to be,
That this shall prove a war. Shakep. Cymbeline.
Their orators thou then extoll'st, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed,
And lovers of their country. Milton's Paradise Reg.

- STATUARY. n. f. [from statuaire, French; from statua, Latin.]
1. The art of carving images or representations of life.
The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary. Tenple.
 2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.
On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets. Albion.
How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years?
This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swift.
- STATUE. n. f. [from statua, Fr. statua, Latin.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.
The prince's heard of her mother's statue, a piece many years in doing, and now newly perform'd by that rare Italian master. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
- They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Stare'd each on other. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Archides propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue, which in his right hand should hold a town capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
A statue of Polycletus, called the rule, deserves that name for having so perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a fault in it. Dryden's Duffresney.
- TO STATUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place as a statue.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy head. Shakespeare.
- STATUURE. n. f. [from statua, Fr. statua, Latin.] The height of any animal.
What statuure we attain at seven years we sometimes double,
most times come short of at one and twenty. Brown.
A creature who might erect
His statuure, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.
Foreign men of mighty statuure came. Dryden.
Thyself but dust, thy statuure but a span;
A moment thy duration; foolish man! Prior.
We have certain demonstration from Egyptian mummies, and Roman urns and rings, and measures and edifices, and many other antiquities, that human statuure has not diminished for above two thousand years. Bentley's Sermons.
- STATUTABLE. adj. [from statuta.] According to statute.
I met with one who was three inches above five feet, the statutable measure of that club. Albion's Guardian.
- STATUTE. n. f. [from statut, French; statutum, Latin.] A law;
an edict of the legislature.
Not only the common law, but also the statutes and acts of parliament were specially intended for its benefit. Spenser.
Blood hath been shed,
Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal. Shakespeare.
There was a statute against vagabonds; wherein note the dislike the parliament had of goaling them, as chargeable and pestiferous. Bacon.
Know the statutes of heaven and laws of eternity, those immutable rules of justice. Tillotson's Sermons.
O queen, indulg'd by favour of the gods,
To build a town, with statutes to restrain
The wild inhabitant beneath thy reign. Dryden's Æneid.
- TO STAVE. v. a. In the plural staves. [from staff.]
1. To break in pieces; used originally of barrels made of small parts or staves.
If irreverent expression, or a thought too wanton are crept into my verses, let them be staved or forfeited like contrabanded goods. Dryden.
 2. To push off as with a staff.
How can they escape the contagion of the writings, whom the virulency of the calumnies have not staved off, from reading. Ben. Johnson.
The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but allurements, attractions, and invitation. South's Sermons.
 3. To pour out by breaking the cask.
The feared disorders that might ensue thereof have been an occasion that divers times all the wine in the city hath been staved. Sandys's Travels.
 4. To furnish with rundles or staves.

Be faithful to thy neighbour in his poverty; abide steadfast unto him in the time of his trouble. Ecclesi. xxii. 23.
Him resist, steadfast in the faith. 1 Pet. v. 9.

STE

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast fight
Cot'd view the surges mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep? Dryden.
STEADFASTLY. adv. [from steadfast.] Firmly; constantly.
God's omniscience steadfastly grasps the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.
In general, steadfastly believe that whatever God hath revealed is infallibly true. Wake's Preparation for Death.
STEADFASTNESS. n. f. [from steadfast.]
1. Immutability; fixedness.
So hard these heavenly beauties be enfr'd,
As things divine, least passions do impress,
The more of steadfast minds to be admir'd,
The more they stayed be on steadfastness. Spenser.
2. Firmness; constancy; resolution.
STEADILY. adv. [from steady.]
1. Without tottering; without shaking.
Sin has a tendency to bring men under evils, unless hindered by some accident which no man can steadily build upon. South's Sermons.
2. Without variation or irregularity.
So steadily does fickle fortune steer
Th' obedient orb that it should never err. Blackmore.
STEADINESS. n. f. [from steady.]
1. State of being not tottering nor easily shaken.
2. Firmness; constancy.
John got the better of his choleric temper, and wrought himself up to a great steadiness of mind, to pursue his interest through all impediments. Arbutnot.
3. Constant unvaried conduct.
Steadiness is a point of prudence as well as of courage. L'Esprit.
A friend is useful to form an undertaking, and secure steadiness of conduct. Collier of Friendship.
STEADY. adj. [stædig, Saxon.]

To feast on ale and steaks. Swift.
To STEAL. v. a. Preterite stole, part. pass. stolen. [stælan, Saxon; stelen, Dutch.]
1. To take by theft; to take clandestinely; to take without right.
To steal generally implies secrecy; to rob, either secrecy or violence.
Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And stole away the ladies hearts of France. Shakespeare.
There are some shrewd contents in yon same paper,
That steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek;
Some dear friend dead. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
How should we steal silver or gold? Gen. xiv. 8.
A schoolboy finding a bird's nest, flews it his companion and he steals it. Shakespeare's care.
2. To withdraw or convey without notice.
The law of England never was properly applied to the Irish,
by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage and submission. Spenser.
Let us shift away, there's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. Shakespeare.
Variety of objects has a tendency to steal away the mind from its steady pursuit of any subject. Watson.
3. To gain or effect by private means.
Young Lorenzo
Stole her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one. Shakespeare.

My lord of Amiens and myself
Did steal behind him as he lay along Under an oak. Shakespeare.

I cannot think it,
That he would steal away so guilty like,
Seeing you coming. Shakespeare's Othello.

The most peaceable way, if you take a thief, is to let him steal what he is, and steal out of your company. Shakespeare.

At time that lover's flights doth full conceal,
Through Athens' gate have we devis'd to steal. Shakespeare.

In my conduct shall your ladies come,
From whom you now must steal and take no leave. Shak.

Others weary of the long journey, lingering behind, were stolen away; and they which were left, mottled with dirt and mire. Kneller.

A bride
Should vanish from her cloaths into her bed,
As souls from bodies steal and are not spy'd. Donne.

The vapour of charcoal hath killed many; and it is the more dangerous, because it cometh without any ill smell, and steals on by little and little. Bacon's Natural History.

A soft and solemn breathing found,
Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
And stole upon the air, that even silence
Was took ere she was ware. Milton.

As wife artists mix their colours so,
That by degrees they from each other go;
Black steals unheeded from the neighb'ring white,
So on us stole our blessed change. Dryden.

At a time when he had no froward, he stole away.
Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
To practise theft; to play the thief; to take any thing thievishly; to have the habit of thieving. Pope.

Stealing is the taking from another what is his, without his knowledge or allowance. Leeke.

The good humour is to steal at a minute's rest. — Convey, the wife it call; steal! a fico for the phrase! Shakespeare.

STEAL'ER. n. f. [from steal.] One who steals; a thief. Shakespeare.

STEAL'INGLY. adv. [from stealing.] Silly; by invisible motion; by secret practice.

They were diverse motions, they did stealingly slip one into another, as the latter part was ever in hand before the eye could discern the former was ended. Sidney.

STEALTH. n. f. [from steal.]

1. The act of stealing; theft.

The owner proveth the stealth to have been committed upon him by such an outlaw, and to have been found in the possession of the prisoner. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The stealth of mutual entertainment
With character too gross is written on Juliet. Shakespeare.

In the secret dark that none reproves,
Their pretty stealths shall work, and snares shall spread. Spenser.

Their good observer, to his stealth. Chapman's Iliad.

2. The thing stolen.

On his back a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stealths, and pillage several. Fairy Queen.

Store of cabins are but stutth dens, that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with splinters. Raleigh.

3. Secret act; clandestine practice. By stealth means secretly; clandestinely; with desire of concealment: but, like steal, is often used in a good sense.

The wisdom of the same spirit borrowed from melody that pleasure, which mingled with heavenly mysteries, causeth the smoothness and softness of that which toucheth the ear, to convey as it were by stealth the treasure of good things into man's mind. Hooker.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

The monarch blinded with desire of wealth,
With steal invades his brother's life by stealth.
Before the sacred altar. Dryden.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward frame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame. Pope.

Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

STEAM. n. f. [from steame, Saxon.] The smoke or vapour of any thing moist and hot.

Sweet odours are, in such a company as there is steam and heat; things of great refreshment. Bacon.

His offering soon propitious fire from heaven
Conform'd with nimble glance and grateful steam. Milton.

While the temple smok'd with hallow'd steam,
They wash the virgin. Dryden.

STE

Such the figure of a scab
Which, were it not for plenty and for steam,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream. King.

Some it bears in steam up into the air, and this in such a quantity as to be manifest to the smell, especially the sulphur, Westward's Natural History.

TO STEAM. v. n. [from steaman, Saxon.]

1. To smoke or vapour with moist heat.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy east,
Got harnessed his fiery-footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam. Fairy Queen.

See, see, my brother's ghost hangs hovering there,
O'er his warm blood, that steams into the air. Dryden.

O wretched we! Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adult'rate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage? Dryden.

In heated bras, steaming with fire intense. Philips.

These minerals not only issue out at these larger exits, but steam forth through the pores of the earth, occasioning sul-phureous and other offensive fumes. Woodward.

2. To send up vapours.

Ye mists that rise from steaming lake. Milton.

3. To pass in vapours.

liquour, whence it steamed away into the air. Boyle.

STEAM for stone. Spenser.

STEATO'MA. n. f. [from steatoma.]

If the matter in a wen resembles milk-curd, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, steatoma. Sharp's Surgery.

STEED. n. f. [from stæda, Saxon.] A horse for state or war.

My noble steed I give him,
With all his trim belonging. Shak. Macbeth.

Impress'd quaint, caparisons and steeds. Milton.

Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds. Waller.

She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,
And him the grisly ghost that spur'd th' infernal steed. Dryden.

Who, like our active African, instructs
The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand? Addison's Cat.

See! the bold youth strain up the threatening steep;
Hang o'er their couriers' heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

STEEL. n. f. [from stæla, Saxon; steel, Dutch.]

1. Steel is a kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red-hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, for several substances that abound in the pilagistion, for several hours in a close furnace. It may also be made by fusion, and several other ways; but they are greatly in the wrong who prefer steel to iron for medicinal purposes. Hill's Mat. Medica.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stu'd with steel-headed darts wherewith the quell'd
The savage beasts in her victorious play. Fairy Queen.

The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Fairfax.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon's Natural History.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily sink fire with steel, much less with one another; nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their eruption. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought to pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakespeare.

A grove of oaks,
Whose polish'd steel from far severely shines,
Are not so dreadful as this beauteous queen. Dryden.

He hidden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' bosom plunged the sword;
Toxus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness: as heads of steel.

TO STEEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To point or edge with steel.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shak. R. II.

2. To

STE

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shakespeare.

So service shall with steeld fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakespeare's H. V.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him rebated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakespeare.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers hearts;
Possess them not with fear. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

Man, foolish man!
Scarce know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet steel'd with study's boldness, thou dar'st try
To fend thy doubted reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulph of vast immensity.
Let the steel'd Turk be dead to matrons' cries, See virgins ravi'd with relentless eyes. Tickell.

STEELY. adj. [from steel.]

1. Made of steel.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakespeare.

Here smokes his forge, he bares his finewy arm,
And early strokes the founding anvil warm;
Around his shop the steely sparks flew,
As for the steed he shap'd the bending shoe. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That the would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sidney.

STEELYARD. n. f. [from steel and yard.] A kind of balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rod, and grows heavier as it is removed farther from the fulcrum.

STEEN, or STEAN. n. f. A vessel of clay or stone. Ainsworth.

STEEP. adj. [from stæp, Saxon.] Rising or descending with little inclination.

He now had conquer'd Anxur's steep ascent. Addison.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; abrupt or descent approaching to per-pendicularity.

As that Theban monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spite Cast herself headlong from the Imaean steep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations, in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards float,
As to the nearer heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble; but humility.
Instructs the beast to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy.
We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep. Gay.

TO STEEP. v. a. [from stæpen, Dutch.] To soak; to macerate;
to imbue; to dip.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very feltness loud he gan to weep.
He, like an adder, lurking in the weeds,
His wandering thought in deep desire does steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty feeds. Fairy Queen.

A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Present to her, as sometime Marg'ret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple tide from her sweet brother's body. Shakespeare.

The conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe. Shakespeare.

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night:
Four nights will quickly dream away the time. Shakespeare.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of the crop is a great matter of gain. Bacon.

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood:
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours and their i'rkome years. Dryden.

Wheat steeped in brine twelve hours prevents the munniness.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

STEEPLE. n. f. [from stæpel, Saxon.] A turret of a church generally furnished with bells. A spire.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanoes spout
Till you have drench'd our steeple, drown'd the cocks. Shakespeare.

STE

What was found in many places, and preached for wheat fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of ivy-berries, and though found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or muted by birds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A raven I saw yesterday steep-high, just over your house.
L'Estrange.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound,
In fields their fullen conventicles found. Dryden.

STEEP'LY. adv. [from steep.] With precipitous declivity.

STEEPNESS. n. f. [from steep.] Precipitous declivity.

The cragg'dness or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible. Brewer's on Language.

Lord Lovel swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the farther side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drowned. Bacon's Henry VII.

Vineyards, meadows, and cornfields lie on the borders, and run up all the sides of the Alps, where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent will suffer them. Addison.

STEEP'Y. adj. [from steep.] Having a precipitous declivity.

A poetical word for steep.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steep crags do beat. Wotton.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steep Othrys' top to Pylus drove His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steep cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme! Dryden.

STEER. n. f. [from stæp, Saxon; stier, Dutch.]
A young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again. Spenser's Ireland.

Lacaon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

Nor has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson.

TO STEER. v. a. [from stæran, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage.

A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Left his long way his aged limbs should tire. Fairy Queen.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him. K. Ch.

TO STEER. v. n. To direct a course.

As when a ship by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft to steers, and shifts her sail. Milton.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass be not that he steers by: Locke.

STEERAGE. n. f. [from steer.]

1. The act or practice of steering.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direst my suit. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it. Spenser.

3. That by which any course is guided.

His costly frame
Inscrib'd to Phœbus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, and cut the sky. Dryden.

4. Regulation, or management of any thing.

You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

5. The stern or hinder part of the ship.

STEERSMAN. n. f. [from steer and man.] A pilot; one who steers a ship.

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
Embar'd with such a steersman at the helm? Milton.

In a storm, though the vessel be pressed never so hard, a skilful steersman will yet bear up against it. L'Estrange.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay. Dryden.

STEGANOGRAPHY. n. f. [from steganos and grapho.] He who practises the art of secret writing. Bailey.

STEGANOGRAPHY. n. f. [from steganos and grapho.] The art of secret writing by characters or cyphers, intelligible only to the persons who correspond one with another. Bailey.

STEGNO-TICK. adj. [from steganos.] Binding; rendering cosive. Bailey.

STELE. n. f. [from stela, Sax. stela, Dutch.] A stalk; a handle.

STELLAR. adj. [from stella.] Astral; relating to the stars.

In part shied down
Their stellar virtue, on all kinds that grow
On earth; made hereby apter to receive Perfection from the sun's more potent ray. Milton.

STE

Salt dissolved, upon fixation, returns to its affected cubes, and regular figures of minerals, as the hexagonal of chrysol, and stellar figure of the stone after.

STELLATE. adj. [stellatus, Latin.] Pointed in the manner of a painted star.

One making a regulus of antimony, without iron, found his regulus adorned with a more conspicuous star than I have seen in several stellate regulus of antimony and mars.

STELLATION. n. f. [from stella.] Emission of light as from a star.

STELLIFEROUS. adj. [stella and fero.] Having stars.

STELLION. n. f. [stellio, Latin.] A newt.

STELLIONATE. n. f. [stellionatus, French; stellionatus, Latin.] A kind of crime which is committed [in law] by a deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is: as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually committed.

STEM. n. f. [stemma, Latin.]

1. The stalk; the twig.

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,

So with two seeming bodies, but one heart.

After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twig in the trunk or stem.

Set them alope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem.

God made, and every herb, before it grew

On the green stem.

The stem thus threaten'd and the sap in thee,

Drops all the branches of that noble tree.

Farewell, you flow'rs, whose buds with early care

I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:

Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,

With fountain streams your fainting souls recall?

The low ring Spring with lavish rain

Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.

2. Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

This is a stem

Of that victorious flock, and let us fear

His native mightiness.

I will assay her worth to celebrate,

And to attend ye toward her glittering state;

Where ye may all, that are of noble stem,

Approach.

Whoever will undertake the imperial diadem, must have of his own wherewith to support it; which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of.

Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem.

3. [Stammen, Swedish.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Orante's barque, ev'n in the hero's view,

From stem to stern, by waves was overborn.

4. To stem. v. a. [stemma, Icelandic.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,

Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape

Ply, stemming nightly toward the Pole.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,

And stem the flood with their erect heads.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern

And untaught Indians, on the stream did glide,

Or fin-like ears did spread from either side.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,

Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,

And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

5. A sink; a bad smell.

Death, death; oh amiable and lovely death!

Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,

Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,

Are from their hives, and houses, driv'n away.

Physicians by the stench of feathers cure the rifting of the mother.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth, the only thing that keeps societies of men from stench and corruption.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,

And clouds of sav'ry stench involve the sky.

3. To stench. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink.

The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water.

STE

2. [For staunch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.

They had better skill to let blood than staunch it.

Refringents to stench and incassatives to thicken the blood.

STENOGRAPHY. n. f. [steno and grapho.] Short-hand.

O the accurst stenography of state!

The princely eagle shrunk into a bat.

STENTOROPHONIC. adj. [from stentor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and phono, a voice.] Loudly speaking or founding.

Of this stentorophonic horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican.

STENTOROPHONIC. adj. [stentor, Saxon; stentor, Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

Whoever first after the troubling the water stepped in, was made whole.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace to step constantly ten yards at a time.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Bury'd his father, by whose death he's stepped

Into a great estate.

3. To move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood

Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,

Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist.

5. To take a short walk.

See where he comes: so please you, step aside;

I'll know his grievance.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,

Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket-side

To bring me berries.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but just that minute stepped out.

6. To walk gravely and slowly.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bathways, stepped forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,

In scorn of your soft looks and tender age!

Home the swain retreats,

His flock before him stepping to the fold.

7. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou found and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death

Can be at once, shall step by step attend

You and your ways.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,

When life was hazardous in every step?

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops, slain in the battle, were all set in order upon a wooden step.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches.

Those heights where William's virtue might have slid,

And on the subject world look'd safely down,

By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made

Sublimer yet to raise his queen's renown.

It was a saying among the ancients, truth lies in a well, and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death.

5. Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me,

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree

In this deep forest.

6. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general, during pleasure, might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise.

7. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here

The prints of her departing steps appear.

8. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne

With a submissive step I halted down;

The glowing garland from my hair I took,

Love in my heart, obedience in my look.

9. Action; influence of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [Saxon, from step, to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs; but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but misdoubt, left this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;

But when the saw her offered sweets refuse,

Her love she turn'd to hate.

You shall not find me, daughter,

After the flander of most step-mothers,

Ill-ey'd unto you.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false.

Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such.

The name of step-dame, your practise'd art,

By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,

All you have done against me, or design,

Shows your aversion, but begets not mine.

A step-dame too I have, a curst she

Who rules my ten-peck'd fire, and orders me.

Any body would have guessed mist to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother.

Like stepping-stones to save a stride,

In streets where kennels are too wide.

STERCORACEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Latin.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces.

STERCORATION. n. f. [from stercora, Latin.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheep's dung is one of the best, and next the dung of kine, and that of horses.

Stercoration is seasonable.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. f. [stereo and grapho; stereographie, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane.

STEREOMETRY. n. f. [stereo and metria; stereometrie, French.] The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies.

STERILE. adj. [sterilis, French; sterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chafe,

Shake off their sterile curse.

Thy sea marge sterile, and rocky hard.

In very sterile years corn sown will grow to another kind.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such are corrupted and sterile swim.

She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable.

When the vegetative fructum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables.

STE

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilitas, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses.

To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it?

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated. The king's treasure of store, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in farthings than in pounds sterling.

2. Genuine; having past the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,

And knows that to be rich is to be wife:

By useful observation he can tell

The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;

How gold makes a patrician of a slave,

A dwarf an Atlas, a Therites brave.

Great name, which in our rolls recorded stands,

Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,

Accent this offering to thy bounty due,

And Roman wealth in English sterling view.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [stern, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,

Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,

Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,

Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,

To win thee, lady.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld

Heart-hard'ning spectacles.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;

Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

The common executioner,

Whole heart th' custom'd fight of death makes hard,

Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,

But first begs pardon: will you sterner be

Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops?

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cry'd, Cæsar hath wept;

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.

Then shall the war, and stern debate and strife

Immortal, be the bus'ness of my life;

And in thy face the dusty spoils among,

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,

We lash the pupil and defraud the ward.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,

All cruels else subscribe'd.

STERN. n. f. [stern, Saxon.] Of the same original with stern.

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryd.
 2. Post of management; direction.
 The king from Eltam I intend to fend,
 And sit at chiefest stern of publick weal. Shaksp. H. VI.
 3. The hinder part of any thing.
 She all at once her beauly body raised,
 With doubled forces high above the ground,
 Though wrapping up her wretched stern around. Fa. Queen.
STERNAGE. n. f. [from stern.] The sterage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
 And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shaksp. Lear.
STERNLY. adj. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely;
 truculently.

Sternly he pronounc'd
 The rigid interdiction. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the same,
 Nor thy limbs moulded in so lost a frame;
 Thou look'st more sternly, do'st more strongly move,
 And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dryden.
STERNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]
 1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
 That sons of men amaz'd their sternness to behold. Spenser.
 How would he look to see his work so noble Willy bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd haunts, behold
 The sternness of his presence! Shaksp. Lear.
 2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
 To hear of soldiers work. Dryden's Cleomenes.
STERNON. n. f. [from stern.] The breast-bone.
 A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wileman.
STERNUTATION. n. f. [from sternutatio, Latin.] The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, first occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils.
Quincy.
 Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
STERNUTATIVE. adj. [from sternutatio, Fr. from sternuto, Latin.]
 Having the quality of sneezing.

STERNUTATORY. n. f. [from sternutatio, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.]
 Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatories, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing; when if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensue, they conceive hopes of life. Brown.
STEVEN. n. f. [from stevon, Saxon.] A cry, or loud clamour.

Ne sooner was out, but swifter than thought,
 Fast by the hide, the wolf Lowder caught;
 And had not Rosly renne to the stevon, Lowder had been slain thilke same even. Spenser.

To STEW. v. a. [from stewer, French; stoven, Dutch.]
 To seeth any thing in a slow moist heat.

Ere I was risen from the place, that show'd
 My duty kneeling, came a recking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathless. Shaksp. King Lear.
 I bruised my skin with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three venies for a dish of stew'd prunes. Shak.

To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow moist heat.
STEW. n. f. [from stew, French; stufa, Italian; stufas, Spanish.]
 1. A bagnio; a hot-house.

As burning stena from his boiling stew
 Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
 And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
 Enwrap't in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fa. Queen.

The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.
 2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. [This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or filthpots in Southwark; but probably stews, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor fallhood, and never brake promise. Afchem.
 My business in this state

Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
 Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
 Till it o'er-run the stew. Shaksp. Lear.
 With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no curtelans. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Her, though seven years she in the stews had laid,
 A nunnerie durst receive and think a maid
 And though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
 Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.

What moderate fop would rake the park or stews,
 Who among troops of faultless nymphs can chafe? Roscom.
 Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to infill the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South's Sermons.

3. [from stewen, Dutch, to store.] A storepond; a small pond where fish are kept for the table.
STEWARD. n. f. [from steward, Saxon.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.
 There sat yead in red,
 Down to the ground, a comely personage,
 That in his hand a white rod managed;
 He steward was, bight diet, ripe of age,
 And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Fa. Queen.
 Whilft I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shak. Timon.
 Take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land;
 Not as protector, steward, substitute,
 Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shaksp. Richard III.
 How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Lu. xvi.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Swift.

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency than to consider, that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives? Swift.

2. An officer of state.
 The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims To be high steward. Shaksp. Lear.

STEWARDSHIP. n. f. [from steward.] The office of a steward.

The earl of Worcester Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship. Shaksp. R. II.
 Shew us the hand of God

That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship. Shaksp. Lear.
 If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it. Calamy's Sermons.

STIBIAL. adj. [from stibium, Latin.] Antimonial.
 The former depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy,
 and the latter upon an adulterated sulphur. Hare.

STICADOS. n. f. [from sticadus, Latin.] An herb.
STICK. n. f. [from sticca, Saxon; sticca, Italian; stick, Dutch.] A piece of wood small and long.

Onions as they hang will shoot forth, and so will the herb orpin, with which in the country they trim their houses, binding it to a lath or stick set against a wall. Bacon's Nat. History.

Some strike from clashing flints their fiery seed,
 Some gather sticks the kindled flames to feed. Dryden.
 To STICK. v. a. preterite stuck; participle stuck. [from sticca, Saxon.] To fasten on so as that it may adhere.

Two troops in fair array one moment show'd;
 The next, a field with fallen bodies strow'd;
 The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
 The steeds without their riders scour the field,
 The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

Would our ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against their country, sacrifice their necklaces against the common enemy, what decrees ought not to be made in their favour! Addison.

Oh for some pedant reign,
 Some gentle James to bless the land again;
 To stick the doctor's chair unto the throne,
 Give law to words, or war with words alone. Pope.

To STICK. v. n.
 1. To adhere; to unite itself by its tenacity or penetrating power.

I will cause the fifth of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales. Ez.
 The green caterpillar breedeth in the inward parts of roses not blown, where the dew sticketh. Bacon.

Though the sword be put into the sheath, we must not let fer it there to rust, or stick so fast as that we shall not be able to draw it readily, when need requires. Raleigh.

2. To be inseparable; to be united with anything. Generally in an ill sense.

Now does he feel
 His secret murders sticking on his hands. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 He is often stigmatized with it, as a note of infamy, to stick by him whilst the world lasts. Sander.

In their quarrels they proceed to calling names, 'till they light upon one that is sure to stick. Swift.

8. To remain; not to be lost.
 Proverbial sentences are formed into a verse, whereby they stick upon the memory. Watts.

9. To dwell upon; not to forsake.
 If the matter be knotty, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and not leave it 'till it has matured the difficulty. Locke.

Every man, besides occasional affections, has beloved studies which the mind will more closely stick to. Locke.
 10. To cause difficulties or scruple.

This is the difficulty that sticks with the most reasonable of those who, from conscience, refuse to join with the Revolution. Swift.

11. To scruple; to hesitate.
 It is a good point of cunning for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less. Bacon.

The church of Rome, under pretext of exposition of Scripture, doth not stick to add and alter. Bacon.
 Rather than impute our miscarriages to our own corruption,
 we do not stick to arraign providence itself. L'Estrange.

Every one without hesitation supposes eternity, and sticks not to subscribe infinity to duration. Locke.
 That two bodies cannot be in the same place is a truth that no body any more sticks at, than at this maxim, that it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be. Locke.

To stick at nothing for the publick interest is represented as the refined part of the Venetian wisdom. Addison on Italy.
 Some stick not to say, that the parson and attorney forged a 12. To be stopped; to be unable to proceed.

 If we should fail.
 — We fail!

But scrow your courage to the sticking place,
 And we'll not fail. Shaksp. Macbeth.

They never doubted the commons; but heard all stick in the lords' house, and desired the names of those who hindered the agreement between the lords and commons. Clarendon.

He threw: the trembling weapon pass'd
 Through nine bull-hides, each under other plac'd
 On his broad shield, and stuck within the last. Dryden.

13. To be embarrassed; to be puzzled.
 Where they stick, they are not to be further puzzled by putting them upon finding it out themselves. Locke.

They will stick long at part of a demonstration, for want of perceiving the connexion of two ideas, that, to one more exercised, is as visible as any thing. Locke.

Souls a little more capacious can take in the connexion of a few propositions; but if the chain be prolix, here they stick and are confounded. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

14. To STICK out. To be prominent with deformity.
 His flesh is consumed away that it cannot be seen, and his bones that were not seen stick out. Job xxxiii. 21.

15. To STICK out. To be unemployed.
 To STICK. v. a. [from sticca, Saxon; sticken, Dutch.]

1. To stab; to pierce with a pointed instrument.
 The Heruli, when their old kindred fell sick, stuck them with a dagger. Grew.

2. To fix upon a pointed body.

 A little fish called a stickleback, without scales; hath his body fenced with several prickles. Walton's Angler.

STICKLER. n. f. [from stickle.]
 1. A defianter to fencers; a second to a duellist; one who stands to judge a combat.

Basilus came to part them, the stickler's authority being unable to persuade cholerick hearers; and part them he did. Sidon.
 Basilus, the judge, appointed sticklers and trumpets, whom the others should obey. Sidon.

Our former chiefs, like sticklers of the war,
 First fought 't' inflame the parties, then to poise:
 The quarrel lov'd, but did the cause abhor;
 And did not strike to hurt, but made a noise. Dryden.

2. An obstinate contender about any thing.
 Quercetanus, though the grand stickler for the tria prima, has this concession of the irrefolubleness of diamonds. Boyle.

The inferior tribe of common women have, in most reigns, been the professed sticklers for such as have acted against the true interest of the nation. Addison's Freeholder.

The tory or high church clergy were the greatest sticklers against the exorbitant proceedings of king James II. Swift.
 All place themselves in the list of the national church, though they are great sticklers for liberty of conscience. Swift.

STICKY. adj. [from stick.] Viscous; adhesive; glutinous.
 Herbs which last longest are those of strong smell and with a sticky stalk. Bacon's Natural History.

STIFF. adj. [from stiff, Saxon; stiff, Danish; stif, Swedish; stifur, Icelandic; stif, Dutch.]

1. Rigid; inflexible; resisting flexure; not flaccid; not limber; not easily flexible; not pliant.

They rising on stiff pinions tower
 The mid aerial sky. Milton.
 The glittering robe
 Hung floating loose, or stiff with mazy gold. Thomson.

2. Not soft; not giving way; not fluid; not easily yielding to the touch.
 Still less and less my boiling spirits flow;
 And I grow stiff as cooling metals do. Dryd. Indian Emp.
 Mingling with that oily liquor, they were wholly incorporated, and so grew more stiff and firm, making but one substance. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Strong; not easily resisted.
 On a stiff gale
 The Theban swan extends his wings. Denham.

4. Hardy; stubborn; not easily subdued.
 How stiff is my vile sense,
 That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract! Shaksp. Lear.

 serted with good evidence.

This is stiff news. Shakspere.
 To STIFFEN. v. a. [from stiffen, Saxon.]

1. To make stiff; to make inflexible; to make unpliant.
 When the blast of war blows in our ears,
 Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
 Disguise fair nature with hard favour'd rage. Shaksp. H. V.
 He stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13.

The poor, by them disrobed, naked lie,
 Veil'd with no other covering but the sky;
 Expos'd to stiffening frosts, and drenching showers,
 Which thicken'd air from her black bosom pours. Sandys.
 Her eyes grow stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn. Dryden.

2. To make obstinate.
 Her stiffening grief,
 Who saw her children slaughter'd all at once,

The vigorous spirit of Montrose stirred him up to make some attempt whether he had any help or no. Clarendon.

The improving of his own parts and happiness stir him up to so noble a design. Mare's Antid. against Atteism.

To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour. Locke.

Thou with rebel insolence did'st dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

The use of the passions is to stir it up, and put it upon action, to awake the understanding and to enforce the will. Addison.

To STIR up. To put in action.

Hell is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stir-reth up the dead for thee. Isa. xiv. 9.

Such mirth the jocund flute or gamefome pipe stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds. Milton.

To STIR. v. n.

1. To move one's self; to go out of the place; to change place.

No power he had to stir nor will to rise. Fanny Queen.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind on the other side of the hill, the fallhood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were therefore not to stir. Clarendon.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit.

3. To become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a colloquial and familiar use.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats of her a little favour of speech. Shakespeare's Othello.

STIR. n. f. [stirn, Runick; a battle; stirf, noise, Welsh.]

1. Tumult; battle.

What halloing and what stir is this to-day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy pallenger in chase. Shakespeare.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir for such a necessity as no man ever denied. Ep. Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldiers, miserable sir,
Why all these words, this clamour and this stir,
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South's Sermons.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glawville.

After all this stir about them they are good for nothing. Til.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of. Locke.

2. Commotion; publick disturbances; tumultuous disorder; redigious uproar.

Whensoever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a foul stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through supplantation of some others who lie in the wind. Spenser's Ireland.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbt.

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without striking a blow. Davies.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth,
Satan from hell 'scap'd through the darksome gulf
Hath rais'd in paradise, and how disturb'd
This night the human pair. Milton.

3. Agitation; conflicting passion.

He did keep
The deck, with glove or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the stirs and fits of his mind
Could best express how flow his soul fail'd on,
How swift his ship. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

STIRIOUS. adj. [from stiria, Latin.] Resembling icicles.

Chrystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or fillicious dependencies of ice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

STIRP. n. f. [stirps, Latin.] Race; family; generation. Not used.

Sundry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps. Spenser.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps of nobles. Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither; of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day. Bacon.

STIRRED. n. f. [from stir.]

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

2. A riser in the morning.

Come on; give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer. Shak.

3. An inciter; an instigator.

4. STIRRED up. An inciter; an instigator.

A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity. Kaleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn barretter in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIRRUP. n. f. [stirrenap, stirnap, from stiran, Saxon, to climb, and nap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way: and therefore the stirrup was called so in corn, as it were a stay to get up, being derived of the old English word stir; which is to get up, or mount. Spenser.

Halt thou not kils'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shak.

His horsehipped with an old mothy fiddle, the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Between the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden's Remains.

At this knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,

Cry'd out Victoria. Hudibras.

To STITCH. v. a. [sticte, Danish; sticken, Dutch.]

1. To sew, to work on with a needle.

2. To join; to unite, generally with some degree of clumsiness or inaccuracy.

Having stitched together these animadversions touching architecture and their ornaments, contemplative spirits are as restless as active. Watson.

3. To STITCH up. To mend what was rent.

It is in your hand as well to stitch up his life again, as it was before to rent it. Sidney.

I with a needle and thread stitch'd up the artery and the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

To STITCH. v. n. To practise needlework.

STITCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pass of the needle and thread through any thing.

2. [From stican, Saxon.] A sharp lancinating pain.

If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourself into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very re-negado. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

A simple bloody sputation of the lungs is differenced from a pleurisy, which is ever painful, and attended with a stitch. Harvey on Consumption.

3. In Chapman it seems to mean furrows or ridges, and perhaps has the same meaning in the following passage of Dryden, which otherwise I do not understand.

Many men at plow he made, and drave earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly. Chapman's Iliad.

A stitch-fall'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand

To STIVE. v. a. [Supposed of the same original with stew.]

1. To stuff up close.
You would admire, if you saw them stive it in their ships.

Sandy's Journey.

His chamber was commonly stived with friends or suitors of one kind or other.

Watson.

STOAT. n. f. A small stinking animal.

STOCH. n. f. [Irish; stock, Erse.] An attendant; a wallet-boy; one who runs at a horseman's foot; a horseboy.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which he faith is the life of a peasant; but thenceforth becometh an horseboy, or a stock to some kern, inuring himself to his sword, and the gentlemanly trade of stealing.

Spenser.

STOCCADO. n. f. [Italice, from stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust with the rapier.

I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

—You stand on distance, your passes, stocade's, and I know not what.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

STOCK. n. f. [Saxo, Saxon; stock, Dutch; stock, French.]

1. The trunk; the body of a plant.

That furious beast

His precious horn, fought of his enemies,

Strikes in the stock, no thence can be released.

Fa. Queen.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again, though the root wax old in the earth, and the stock die in the ground.

Job xiv. 8.

2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.

The cion over-rueth the stock quite; and the stock is but passive only, and giveth alment but no motion to the graft.

Bacon's Natural History.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,

On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;

The surest virtues thus from passions shoot,

Pope.

Wild nature's vigour working at the root.

3. A log; a post.

That they kept thy truth to pure of old,

When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones,

Milton.

Forget not.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,

That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?

Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?

Prior.

And is there no such wood in France?

4. A man proverbially stupid.

What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,

And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,

That neither I may speak nor think at all,

Spenser.

But like a stupid stock in silence die?

While we admire

This virtue and this moral discipline,

Shakespeare.

Let's be no flocks, nor no stocks.

5. The handle of any thing.

6. A support of a ship while it is building.

Fresh supplies of ships,

And such as fitted since the figs had been,

Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road.

Dryden.

7. [Italice, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust; a flocado.

To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy puncto, thy stock, thy reverse.

Shakespeare.

8. Something made of linen; a cravat; a close neckcloth. Anciently a stocken.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other.

—The noble house of Marcius.

Shakel. Coriolanus.

His early virtues to that ancient stock

Gave as much honour as from thence he took.

Waller.

The like shall sing

All prophesy, that of the royal stock

Of David, so I name this king's shall rise

Milton.

A son, the woman's seed.

Thou hast seen one world begin, and end,

And man, as from a second stock, proceed.

Milton.

To no human stock.

We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,

That cloven rock produc'd thee.

Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock

From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock,

Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred.

Denham.

10. The principal; capital store; fund already provided.

Prodigal men

Feel not their own stock wasting.

Ben. Johnson. Catiline.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign; so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A king, against a storm, must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory.

South.

Some honour of your own acquire;

Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,

Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe.

Dryden.

Yet was the not profuse; but fear'd to waste,

And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;

That all might be supply'd, and the not grieve,

When crouds appear'd, the had not to relieve;

Which to prevent, the fill increas'd her store;

Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more.

Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,

And with one common stock their traffick drive:

All is the state, the state provides for all.

Dryden's Garg.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind?

When we brought it out it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time.

Addison on Lib.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities.

Of those stars, which our imperfect eye

Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,

Each by a native stock of honour great,

May dart forth influence, and diffuse kind heat.

Prior.

They had law-suits; but, though they spent their income, they never mortgag'd the stock.

Arbutnot.

11. Quantity; store; body.

A great benefit such a natural history, as may be confiding, will prove to the whole stock of learned mankind.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;

But oftner bring the nation to decay,

And sweep the present stock and future hope away.

Dryden.

He proposes to himself no small stock of fame in future ages,

in being the first who has undertaken this design.

Arbutnot.

12. A fund established by the government, of which the value rises and falls by artifice or chance.

An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the publick.

Swift.

Statefman and patriot ply alike the stocks,

Peers and builer share alike the box.

Pope.

To STOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To store; to fill sufficiently.

As I have life and honour, there shall he sit 'till noon.

As I have life and honour, there shall he sit 'till noon.

As I have life and honour, there shall he sit 'till noon.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of sheep?

He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking, when he had them both upon a leg.

See how he rolls his stockings!

At am'rous Flavio is the stocking thrown,

That very night he longs to lie alone.

Pope.

The families of farmers live in filth and nastiness, without a shoe or stocking to their feet.

To STOCKING. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in stockings.

Stocking'd with loads of fat town-dirt, he goes.

Dryden.

STOCKING. n. f. [Italice, from stock, Dutch; stock, French.]

A low wretch who gets money by buying and selling shares in the funds.

The stockholder thus from 'Change-alley goes down,

And tips you the freeman a wink;

Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,

And here is a guinea to drink.

Swift.

STOCKISH. adj. [from stock.] Hard; blockish.

The poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, flosses, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,

But muck for the time doth change his nature.

Shakel. Henry VI.

STONE. n. f. [flains, Gothick; gran, Saxon; steen, Dutch.] Stones are bodies insipid, hard, not ductile or malleable, not soluble in water. Woodward's Meth. Foss.
We understand by the term stones fossil bodies, solid, not ductile under the hammer, fixed in the fire, not easily melted in it, and not to be dissolved by water. Stones are arranged under two distinct series, the softer and the harder. Of the softer stones there are three general distinctions. 1. The foliaceous or flaky, as talk. 2. The fibrous, as the alabastrus. 3. The granulated, as the gypsum. Of the harder stones there are also three general distinctions. 1. The opaque stones, as limestone. 2. The semi-pellucid, as agate. 3. The pellucid, as crystal and the gems. Hill's Mat. Med.
Should I go to church, and see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me strait of dang'rous rocks! Shakespeare.
The English used the stones to reinforce the pier. Hayward.
2. Piece of stone cut for building.
He shall bring forth the head stone with shoutings. Zech. iv.
3. Gem; precious stone.
I thought I saw
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
4. Any thing made of stone.
Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then the lives. Shakespeare.
5. Calculous concretion in the kidneys or bladder; the disease arising from a calculus.
A specifick remedy for preventing of the stone I take to be the constant use of alcohol-ale. Temple.
A gentleman supposed his difficulty in urining proceeded from the stone. Wise man's Surgery.
6. The case which in some fruits contains the seed.
To make fruits without core or stone is a curiosity. Bacon.
7. Testicle.
Does Wood think that we will sell him a stone of wool for his counters? Swift.
9. STONE is used by way of exaggeration.
What need you be so bold'rous rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone still. Shakespeare. K. John.
And there lies Who vacuum by my side,
Stone dead, and in his own blood dy'd. Hudibras.
The fellow held his breath, and lay stone still, as if he was dead.
She had got a trick of holding her breath, and lying at her length for stone dead. L'Estrange.
The cottages having taken a country-dance together, had been all out, and stood stone still with amazement. Pope.
10. To leave no STONE unturned. To do every thing that can be done for the production or promotion of any effect.
Women, that left no stone unturn'd
In which the cause might be concern'd,
Brought in their children's spoons and whistles,
To purchase swords, carbines, and pistols. Hudibras.
He crimes invented, left stone no stone
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.
STONE. adj. Made of stone.
Present her at the lect,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakespeare.
To STONE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To petrify or beat or kill with stones.
These people be almost ready to stone me. Ex. xvii. 4.
Crucifixion was a punishment unknown to the Jewish laws, among whom the stoning to death was the punishment for blasphemy. Stephens's Sermons.
2. To harden.
Oh perjurd woman! thou do'st stone my heart;
And mak'st me call what I intend to do,
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice. Shakespeare. Othello.
STONEBREAK. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
STONECHATTER. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
STONECROP. n. f. A sort of tree.
Stenocrop tree is a beautiful tree, but not common. Mortimer.
STONECUTTER. n. f. [from stone and cutter.] One whose trade is to hew stones.
A stonecutter's man had the vesiculae of his lungs so stuffed with dust, that, in cutting, the knife went as if through a heap of sand.
My professor provided me a monument at the stonecutter's, and would have erected it in the parish-church. Swift.
STONEFLY. n. f. An insect. Ainsworth.
STONEFRUIT. n. f. [from stone and fruit.] Fruit of which the seed is covered with a hard shell enveloped in the pulp.
We gathered ripe apicocks and ripe plums upon one tree, from which we expect some other sorts of stonefruit. Boyle.
STONEHAWK. n. f. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.
STONEHORSE. n. f. [from stone and horse.] A horse not castrated.
Where there is most arable land, stonehorses or geldings are more necessary. Mortimer's Husbandry.

There's one found in a stonepit. Woodward.
STONEPITCH. n. f. [from stone and pitch.] Hard insipid pitch.
The Egyptian mummies are reported to be as hard as stonepitch. Bacon's Nat. History.
STONEPLOVER. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
STONEPICKLE. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
STONEROCK. n. f. [from stone and rock.] Building of stone.
They make two walls with flat stones, and fill the space with earth, and so they continue the stonerock. Mortimer.
STONINESS. n. f. [from stone.] The quality of having many stones.
The name Hexton owes its original to the stoniness of the place.
Small gravel or stoniness is found therein. Mortimer.
STONY. adj. [from stone.]
1. Made of stone.
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakespeare. Jul. Cæs.
With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakespeare. Rom. and Jul.
Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stormy blasts,
Or turn up their. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden's Virgil.
As in spires he flood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own. Dryden.
They suppose these bodies to be only water petrified, or converted into these sparry or stony icicles. Woodward.
2. Abounding with stones.
From the stony Menalus
Bring your flocks, and live with us. Milton.
3. Petrified.

Pierce to my heart, and pass through every side. F. Quen.
4. Hard; inflexible; unrelenting.
The stony hardness of too many patrons hearts, not touched with any feeling in this case. Dryden's Virgil.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch Uncapable of pity. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Eight yards of uneven ground is threecore and ten miles a-foot with me, and the stony hearted villains know it. Shakespeare.
At this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone; and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
I will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton. Par. Lost.
Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt?
STOOD. The pretense of to stand.
Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood. Milton.
STOOL. n. f. [stols, Gothick; stool, Saxon; stool, Dutch.]
1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.
If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts's Logic.
Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Fa. Quen.
Now which were wife, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stoos. Prior.
The more she reads, the more perplex.
2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.
There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools; those that purge by stools, as such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesentery veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesentery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural History.
The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have continual need of going to stool. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. STOOL of Repentance, or catty stool, in the Kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a feat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays in the forenoon; and after sermon

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogeri.
8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind music are regulated.
You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shaksp.
Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingl'd,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop she please. Shaksp. Hamlet.
The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milt. Par. Lost.
The found
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volent touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibias; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classical author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.
9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.
The further a string is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.
10. The act of applying the stops in music.
Th' organ-found a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel's Civil War.
11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.
Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears fill'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill plac'd. Cresshaw.
- STOPECOCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopp'd by a turning cock.
No man could spit from him without it, but would drivell like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, 'till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.
- STOPEPAGE. n. f. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopp'd.
The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation. Arbutnot.

Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred stör
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.
4. Storehouse; magazine.
Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into stör convey'd. Milton.
What floods of treasure have flow'd into Europe by that action, so that the cause of Christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and stör treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon's Holy War.
- TO STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish; to replenish.
Wise Plato said the world with men was stör'd,
That succour each to other might afford.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stör'd;
Her pow'r with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.
2. To stock against a future time.
Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and stör of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stör'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knox's Hist. of the Turks.
One having stör'd a pond of four acres with carp, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Holt.
The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby *stör*s itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Haker.
They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. Fairy Queen.
Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Gen. xli. 56.
- To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan flood can wash away.
My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Parad. Reg.
The image of God was replem'd in man's practical understanding, namely that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
- As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Held.
- STORER. n. f. [from stör.] One who lays up.
STORIED. adj. [from stör.] Adorned with historical pictures.
Let my due feet never fall
To walk the staidous cloisters pale;
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar massy proof,
And storied windows richly light,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren the sons of Noah. Raleigh.
These I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milton.
To king Artaxerxes, thy servants Rathumnus the story- writer, and Smellius the scribe. Esdr. ii. 17.
The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.
Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force; yet by some light miscarriage which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found but only in story. South's Sermons.
2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.
In the road between Bern and Soleure, a monument erected by the republic of Bern, tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.
3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.
These fables and facts, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire, Author'd by her grandame. Shakspere's Macbeth.

A lyric ode would flate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.
- TO STÖRY. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To tell in history; to relate.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than stör him in his own hearing. Shakspere's Cymbeline.
'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Stör'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's and enchanted isles,
And rifed rocks; whose entrance leads to hell. Milton.
It is stör'd of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big,
that no man could grasp one of them about with both his arms.
Recite them, nor in erring pity fear,
To wound with stör-ed griefs the filial ear. Pope.
2. To range one under another.
Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or stör'd according to the difference of it; any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons.
- STÖRYTELLER. n. f. [stör and tell.] One who relates tales;
An historian. In contempt.
In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old stör-tellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who mis'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd to soon. Dryden.
Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious stör-tellers. Swift's Polite Conversation.

It's less than that I fear. Fair. Queen.
The fox his copsemate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy störnd,
He with him far'd some better chance to find. Hubbard.
2. Astonishment; amazement.
Thus we stood as in a störnd,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground. Goy.
3. Hour; time; season. Spenser.
- STÖUR. n. f. [stör, Runick, a battle; stör, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.
And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stör,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowr. Fairy Queen.
Love

STR

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdu'd my poor captiv'd heart,
And raging now therein with restless flours,
Do't tyrannize in every weaker part.
The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stonny tower,
And were not heavenly grace that him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flower.
But he was wary of that deadly floure.

It came to us, I do in justice charge thee
That thou commend it strangely to some place, Where chance may nurse or end it. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
2. Wonderfully; in a way to cause wonder, but with a degree of dislike.
My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
How strangely active are the arts of peace,
Whose restless motions less than wars do cease;
Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise;
And war more force, but not more pains, employs. Dryden.
We should carry along with us some of those virtuous qualities, which we were strangely careless if we did not bring from home with us. Sprat's Sermons.
In a time of affliction the remembrance of our good deeds will strangely cheer and support our spirits. Calvary.
- STRANGENESS. n. f. [from strange.]

Men worthier than himself
Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;
And undergo, in an observing kind,
His humorous predominance. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
This raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the strangeness and seeming unreasonableness of all the former articles. South's Sermons.
4. Mutual dislike.
In this peace there was an article that no Englishman should enter into Scotland, and no Scottishman into England, without letters commendatory: this might seem a means to continue a strangeness between the nations; but it was done to lock in the borders. La. on.
5. Wonderfulness; power of raising wonder.
If a man, for curiosity or strangeness sake, would make a puppet pronounce a word, let him consider the motion of the instruments of voice, and the like sounds made in inanimate bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

STR

- STRANGER. n. f. [from stranger, French.]
1. A foreigner; one of another country.
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge of your dominions; having here
Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger
Of here and every where. Shakespeare.
There is no place in Europe so much frequented by strangers, whether they are such as come out of curiosity, or such who are obliged to attend the court of Rome. Addison on Italy.
Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here. Graville.

To STRIP. v. a. [from strip, Dutch.] To variegate with lines of different colours. STRIPE. n. f. [from stripe, Dutch.]
1. A lineary variation of colour. This seems to be the original notion of the word. Gardeners may have three roots among an hundred that are rare, as purple and carnation of several stripes. Bacon.
2. A shred of a different colour. One of the most valuable trimmings of their cloaths was a long stripe sowed upon the garment, called latus clavus. Arbutnot.
3. A weal; or discolouration made by a lash or blow. Cruelly marked him with inglorious stripes. Thompson.
4. A blow; a lash. A body cannot be so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions. Hayward. To those that are yet within the reach of the stripes and reproofs of their own conscience; I would address that they would not seek to remove themselves from that wholesome discipline. Decay of Piety.
STRIPPLING. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A youth; one in the state of adolescence. Thwart the lane, He, with two stripplings, lads, more like to run The country bale, than to commit such slaughter, Made good the passage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline. Now a strippling cherub he appears, Not of the prime, yet such as in his face Youth smil'd celestial. Milton's Paradise Lost. Compositions on any important subjects are not matters to be wrong from poor stripplings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit. Milton on Education. As when young stripplings whip the top for sports, On the smooth pavement of an empty court; The wooden engine whirls. Dryden's Æneid. As every particular member of the body is nourished with a several qualified juice, so children and stripplings, old men and young men must have divers diets. Arbutnot on Aliments.
To STRIVE. v. n. Preterite I strove, anciently I strived; part. pass. striven. [from strove, Dutch; striver, French.]
1. To struggle; to labour; to make an effort. The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hosker. Many brave young minds have, through hearing the praises and eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations, and so strive to the like deserts. Spenser. So have I strived to preach the gospel. Rom. xv. 20.
2. To contend; to contend; to struggle in opposition to another: with against or with before the person opposed. Do as adversaries do in law; Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Shakespeare. Thou art caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord. Jer. i. 24. Strive for the truth unto death. Eccles. iv. 28. Why dost thou strive against him? Job xxxiii. 13. Charge them that they strive not about words to no profit. 2 Tim. ii. 14. Avoid contentions and strivings about the law. Tit. iii. 9. This is only warrantable conflict for the trial of our faith; so that these strivings are not a contending with superior powers. LeStrange.
Thus does every wicked man that contemns God, who can save or destroy him who strives with his Maker. Tillotson. Now private pity strives with public hate, Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate. Denham. If intestine broils alarm the hive, For two pretenders oft for empire strive, The vulgar in divided factions jar; And murmur'ing sounds proclaim the civil war. Dryden.
3. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence. Nor that sweet grove Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd Castalian spring, might with this paradise Of Eden strive. Milton's Parad. Lost.
STRIVER. n. f. [from strive.] One who labours; one who contends. STROKAL. n. f. An instrument used by glass makers. Bailey.
STROKE. or Strak. Q. d. preterite of strike, now commonly struck. He stroke him. Sidney.

STROKE. n. f. [from strook, the preterite of strike]

1. A blow; a knock; a sudden act of one body upon another.
Th' oars were silver,

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. A hostile blow.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp. Henry.
He entered and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without striking stroke. Bacon.

His white-man'd steeds that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke,
Then urg'd his fiery chariot on the foe,

And rising, shook his lance in act to throw. Dryden.
Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

I had a long design upon the ears of Curl, but the rogue would never allow me a fair stroke at them, though my pen-knife was ready. Swift.

3. A sudden disease or affliction.
Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shaksp. King Lear.

4. The found of the clock.
What is't o'clock?—
Upon the stroke of four. Shaksp. Richard III.

5. The touch of a pencil.
Oh, lasting as those colours may they shine!
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line. Pope.

6. A touch; a masterly or eminent effort.
Another in my place would take it for a notable stroke of good breeding, to compliment the reader. L'Estrange.

The boldest strokes of poetry, when managed artfully, most delight the reader. Dryden's State of Innocence.

As he purchased the first success in the present war, by forcing, into the service of the confederates, an army that was raised against them, he will give one of the finishing strokes to it, and help to conclude the great work. Addison.

A verdict more puts me in possession of my estate, I question not but you will give it the finishing stroke. Arbutnot.

Isidore's collection was the great and bold stroke, which in its main parts has been discovered to be an impudent forgery. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

7. An effect suddenly or unexpectedly produced.
8. Power; efficacy.

These having equal authority for instruction of the young prince, and well agreeing, bare equal stroke in divers faculties. Rayward.

Perfectly opacous bodies can but reflect the incident beams, those that are diaphanous refract them too, and that refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours, generated by the trajection of light through drops of water, that exhibit a rainbow through divers other transparent bodies. Boyle.

He has a great stroke with the reader when he condemns any of his poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

The subtle effluvia of the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation. Key.

TO STROKE. v. a. [from stroc, Saxon.]

1. To rub gently with the hand by way of kindness or endearment; to soothe.

Thus children do the silly birds they find
With stroking hurt, and too much cramming kill. Sidney.

The senior wended, his younger shall teach,
More stroked and made of, when ought it doth aile,
More gentle ye make it for yoke or the pail. Tuffin.

Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike.

One doth not stroke me, nor the other strike. Ben. Jonson.

He set forth a proclamation stroking the people with fair promises, and humouring them with invectives against the king and government. Bacon.

He dry'd the falling drops, and yet more kind,
He strook her cheeks. Dryden.

Come, let us practise death,
Stroke the grim lion till he grow familiar. Dryden.

She pluck'd the rising flow'rs, and fed
The gentle beast, and fondly stroak'd his head. Addison.

2. To rub gently in one direction.
When the big-udder'd cows with patience stand,
Waiting the stroakings of the damsel's hand. Gay.

TO STROLL. v. n. To wander; to ramble; to rove; to be a vagrant.

1. To confound or dizzy with noise.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Assaults his ear. Milton.
Still shall I hear, and never quit the score,
Stun'd with hoarse Codrus' Theſeid o'er and o'er. Dryden.
Too strong a noise stuns the ear, and one too weak does not act upon the organ. Cheyne.
So Alma, weary'd of being great,
And nodding in her chair of state,
Stun'd and worn out with endless chat,
Of Will did this, and Nan said that.
Shouts as thunder loud affright the air,
And stun the birds releas'd.
The Britons, once a savage kind,
Descendants of the barbarous stuns,
With limbs robust, and voice that stuns,
You taught to modulate their tongues,
And speak without the help of lungs. Swift.
2. To make senseless or dizzy with a blow.
One hung a pole-ax at his saddle-bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.
STUNG. The pretense and participate passive of sting.

STURDY. adv. [sturdy, French.]
1. Hardy; stout; brutal; obstinate. It is always used of men with some disagreeable idea of coarseness or rudeness.
This must be done, and I would fain see Mortal so sturdy as to gain say. Hudibras.
A sturdy hardened finner shall advance to the utmost pitch of impiety with less reluctance than he took the first steps, whilst his conscience was yet vigilant and tender. Atterbury.
Aw'd by that house, accusom'd to command,
The sturdy kerns in due subjection stand,
Nor bear the reins in any foreign hand. Dryden.
2. Strong; forcible.
The ill-appareled knight now had gotten the reputation of some sturdy stout, he had so well defended himself. Sidney.
No ought his sturdy strokes might stand before,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in pieces tore. F. 2.
3. Stiff; stout.
He was not of any delicate contexture, his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.
Sturdy oaks
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton's Par. Reg.
STURGEON. n. f. [sturis, tursio, Latin.] A sea-fish.
It is part of the scutellated bone of a sturgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution on one side, the cells being worn down, and smooth on the other. Woodward.
STURK. n. f. [Scye, Saxon.] A young ox or heifer. Bailey.
Thus they are still called in Scotland.
To STUT. v. n. [stuten, to hinder, Dutch.] To speak
To STUTTER. v. n. with hesitation; to stammer.
Divers stut: the cause is the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move; and therefore naturals stut. Bacon.

Bent their aspect. Milton.

STY'LE. n. f. [from stylus, Latin.]

1. Manner of writing with regard to language.

Happy

That can translate the stubbornness of fortune

Into so quiet, and so sweet a style. Shakef. Tempest.

Their beauty I will rather leave to poets, than venture upon so tender and nice a subject with my feeble style. Milton.

Proper words in proper places, make the true definition of a style. Swift.

Let some lord but own the happy lines,

How the wit brightens, and the style refines. Pope.

Manner of speaking appropriate to particular characters.

No style is held for base, where love well named is. Sidney.

There was never yet philosopher,

That could endure the toothach patiently,

However they have writ the style of gods,

And make a pish at chance and sufferance. Shakef. Tempest.

2. Title; appellation.

Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Shakef. Tempest.

The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarendon.

O virgin! or what other name you bear

Above that style; O more than mortal fair!

Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain. Dryden's Æn.

Propitious hear our pray'r,

Whether the style of Titan please thee more,

Whose purple rays th' Achæmenes adore. Pope's Statius.

3. Course of writing. Unusual.

While his thoughts the ling'ring day beguile,

To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

5. A pointed iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.

6. Any thing with a sharp point, as a graver; the pin of a dial.

Placing two styles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same loadstone, when the one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

7. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.

Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name. Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, styles, and seed-vessel. Roy.

8. STYLE of Court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding. Quincy's Parergon.

To STYLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To call; to term; to name.

The chancellor of the Exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

Err not that so shall end

The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style

The strife of glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortune's gifts, my actions

May style their own rewards. Denham's Suppl.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to style it impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.

His conduct might have made him styl'd

A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STY'PTICK. adj. [from stypticos, Gr.] This is usually written styptic. See STYPTIC. The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hemorrhages. Quincy.

Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, sour or styptic.

STYPTICITY. n. f. [Properly stypticity.] The power of styptic.

ing blood. Arbutnot on Alimant.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

To STY'TRY. v. a. [See STY'TRY.] To forge on an anvil.

By the forge that styth'd Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee every where, ven, o'er and o'er. Shakef. Tempest.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suader, Latin.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suader, Lat.] Having power to persuade.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South's Sermons.

SUA'SORY. adj. [from suasivus, Latin.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY. n. f. [from suavis, French; suavitas, Latin.]

1. Sweetness to the senses.

She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

2. Sweetness to the mind.

SUB. in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUB'CID. adj. [from subcidus, Latin.] Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly sub- acid in all plants. Arbutnot on Alimant.

SUB'CRID. adj. [from subcidus, Latin.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

To SUB'CT. v. a. [from subducere, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUB'ACTION. n. f. [from subactio, Latin.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation;

whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon's Natural History.

SUB'ALTERN. adj. [from subalternus, French.] Inferior; subordinate; that which in different respects is both superior and inferior. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Add.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,

Like watchmen round their chief appear;

Each had his lantern in his hand,

And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet after he received his commission for a regiment, he confided the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Scott.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [from subalternus, Latin.] Succeeding by turns. Ditt.

SUBASTRINGENT. adj. [from substringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. f. [from sub and beadle.] An under beadle.

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ayliffe's Parerg.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [from sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of the celestial. Glenn's Scpt.

SUBCH'ANTER. n. f. [from sub and chanter; succentor, Lat.] The deputy of the precursor in a cathedral.

SUBCLAVIAN. adj. [from sub and clavus, Latin.]

Subclavian is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the sub- clavian division, doth equi-distantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Arb.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. f. [from sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [from sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferious degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are sub- contraries; as, some vine is a tree: some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watts.

SUBCONTRACTED. adj. [from sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,

I bar it in the interest of my wife;

'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,

And I her husband contradict your banes. Shakef. K. Lear.

SUBCUTANEOUS. adj. [from sub and cutaneus.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDEACON. n. f. [from subdeaconus, Latin.]

In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SUBDEAN. n. f. [from subdean, Lat.] The vicegerent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only. Ayliffe.

SUBDECEP'T. adj. [from sub and decepius, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [from sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridi-culing with tenderness and delicacy.

This subderisive mirth is far from giving any offence to us:

it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. Merr.

SUBDITITIOUS. adj. [from subditivus, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [from sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdiver- sify according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [from subdividere, French; sub and divide.]

To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two beams, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen. Bacon's Nat. History.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after An-tonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,

When he can subdivide a fraction. Resmon.

In the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVISION. n. f. [from subdivision, French; from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a sub- division; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther sub- divided into minutes and seconds. Watts's Logic.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Adams.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbutnot.

SUB'POLEUS. adj. [from sub and polus, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; illy.

To SUBDUCE. } v. a. [

SUB

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it.

Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistracies of the sovereign.

Were subjects to be only by their choice, And not from birth did fore'd dominion take,

Our prince alone would have the publick voice.

2. That on which any operation either mental or material is performed.

Now spurs the latest traveller apace, To gain the timely inn, and near approaches

The subject of our watch.

This subject for heroic song pleas'd me,

Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation.

I will not venture on so nice a subject with my feverish style.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which being capable of all the graces that colours, and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art, an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns; children, women, old folks, sick folks.

4. [In Grammar.] The nominative case to a verb, is called by Grammarians the subject of the verb.

5. The act of subduing.

After the conquest of the kingdom and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that fighting against the king had saved themselves by flight.

6. [Subjection, Fr.] The state of being under government.

Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary; we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that having once felt before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found endurment.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite.

7. [Subjunctive, Fr.] Relating not to the object but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjunctive: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjunctive, when we are certain of the truth of it.

8. [Sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which, forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subjugation of its parts.

9. [Sub and junctio, Fr. and junctio, Latin.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjugate a reason.

10. [Subjugare, Fr. subjugare, Latin.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O fav'rite virgin that hast warm'd the breast, Whose sov'reign reign dictates subjugate the east!

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal.

11. [Subjugation, Fr.] The act of subduing.

12. [Subjunction, Fr.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to some other verb.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

The particles of mercury uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt compose mercury sublimite, and with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar.

To SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublimare.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire.

The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it.

3. SUBLIMATION. n. f. [from sublimare, Fr. from sublimare.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation, only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed being solid are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation or sublimation; that is a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns

Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange.

Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality?

3. SUBLIME. adj. [from sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime

With clang despis'd the ground.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly frained to the height

In that celestial colony sublime.

Can it be, that souls sublime

Return to visit our terrestrial realm;

And that the gen'rous mind releas'd by death,

Can cover lazy limbs?

3. High in title or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile, thy work in sense sublime.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,

Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,

Sublime with expectation.

Their hearts were joind and sublime,

Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine.

5. Haughty; proud.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures.

6. SUBLIME. n. f. The grand or lofty stile. The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,

And is himself the great sublime he draws.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together.

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads

Of letters, which have past twixt thee and me,

Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be

To all, whom love's subliming fire invades.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,

Nor can thy head, not help, itself sublime,

Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow'r's, and then fruit,

Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd

To vital spirits aspire.

The fancies of mort are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which even in the most sublimated intellectual is dangerously influential.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by posthumous after-applications of them to their purposes. South's Sermons.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [from subservire, Latin.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule, But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [from subservire.] Instrumental fitness to use.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning, carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any other-wise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is an immediate and agill subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale's Origines of Manhood.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheney's Philosophical Principles.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [from subserviens, Latin.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them servicable to man. Roy.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient here-in. Greaves.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Greaves.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art, Still make the whole depend upon a part; They talk of principles, but notions prize, And all to one low dolly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSETUPLE. adj. [from subsetuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subsetuple proportion unto it, two of them a subsetuple proportion, three a subsetuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [from subside, Latin.] To sink; to tend downwards.

He shook the sacred honours of his head With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hills, And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now love suspends his golden scales in air, Weighs the mens wits against the lady's hair; The doubtful beam long nods from side to side: At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. f. [from subside.] The act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDARY. adj. [from subsidiarius, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidi.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDY. n. f. [from subsidium, Fr. subsidium, Latin.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. v. a. [from subsignare, Latin.] To sign under.

SUB

Neither have they seen any deed before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without surnames. Camd.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [from subsistere, Fr. subsistere, Latin.]

1. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

1. To continue; to retain the present state or condition. Milton.

Firm we subsist, but poised to swerve.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Swift.

2. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other mens charity. Atterbury.

3. To inhere; to have existence.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South's Sermons.

SUBSISTENCE. n. f. [from subsistere, Fr. from subsistere.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God began both at one instant, his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [from subsistens, Latin.] Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. f. [from substantia, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing, Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods, And this empyreal substance cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold, And substance. Milton.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burn.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to night Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard, Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers Arm'd in proof and led by shallow Richard. Shakespeare.

He the future evil shall no less In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide, And he the substance, not th' appearance chose; To rescue one such friend he took more pride, Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as water between the tinged corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL. adj. [from substantialis, Fr. from substantia.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True;

SUB

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.
O blessed! blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life.
If happiness be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.
Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and have been immerg'd.
The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue.
Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy.
A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude.
3. Corporeal; material.
Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days?
The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky, all which are gross futilities.
4. Strong; stout; bulky.
Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault.
5. Responsible; moderately wealthy.
Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders.
The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families.
SUBSTANTIALS, n. f. [Without singular.] Essential parts.
Although a custom introduced against the substantial of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior, but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidentals of an appeal.
SUBSTANTIALITY, n. f. [from substantial.]
1. The state of real existence.
2. Corporeity; materiality.
Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality, and owns nothing of these.
SUBSTANTIALLY, adv. [from substantial.]
1. In manner of a substance; with reality of existence.
In him his Father thence substantially express'd.
2. Strongly; solidly.
Having to substantially provided for the North, they promised themselves they should end the war that Summer.
3. Truly; solidly; really; with fixed purpose.
The laws of this religion would make men, if they would truly observe them, substantially religious towards God, chaste and temperate.
4. With competent wealth.
SUBSTANTIALNESS, n. f. [from substantial.]
1. The state of being substantial.
2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, how can the language which consisteth of these found other than most full of sweetness?
In degree of substantialness next above the doricque, sustaining the third, and adorning the second story.
To SUBSTANTIATE, v. a. [from substantia.] To make to exist.
The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advances to the act itself already substantiated.
SUBSTANTIVE, n. f. [from substantivus, French; substantivum, Latin.]
A noun betokening the thing, not a quality.
Claudian perpetually clothes his sense at the end of a verse, commonly called golden, or two substantives and two adjectives with a verb betwixt them.
SUBSTANTIVE, adj. [from substantivus, Latin.]
1. Solid; depending only on itself. Not in use.
He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner.
2. Betokening existence.
One is obliged to join many particulars in one proposition, because the repetition of the substantive verb would be tedious.
To SUBSTITUTE, v. a. [from substituere, Fr. substituere, from sub and stituere, Latin.] To put in the place of another.
In the original designs of speaking, a man can substitute none for them that can equally conduce to his honour.
If a swarthy tongue
Is underneath his humid palate hung,
Reject him and substitute another.
Some few verses are inserted or substituted in the room of others.
SUBSTITUTE, n. f. [from substituere, Fr. from the verb.] One placed by another to act with delegated power.

SUB

- Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
To him and his substitutes.
You've taken up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father,
And here upswarm'd them.
Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
And these inferior far beneath me let?
Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the same power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those several substitutes who act under him.
SUBSTITUTION, n. f. [from substituere, Fr. from substituere.] The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another; the state of being placed in the room of another.
He did believe
He was the duke, from substitution,
And executing th' outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative.
Nor sal, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, so separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chymists imagine to be wanting.
To SUBSTRATE, v. a. [from substratus, Lat. substratum, French.]
1. To take away part from the whole.
2. To take one number from another.
SUBSTRATION, n. f. [from substratus, French.]
1. The act of taking away part from the whole.
I cannot call this piece Tully's nor my own, being much altered not only by the change of the style, but by addition and subtraction.
2. [In arithmetic.] The taking of a lesser number out of a greater of like kind, whereby to find out a third number, being or declaring the inequality, excess, or difference between the numbers given.
SUBSTRUCTION, n. f. [from substruere, from sub and struere, Latin.] Underbuilding.
To found our habitation firmly, examine the bed of earth upon which we build, and then the underfillings, or substruction, as the ancients call it.
SUBSTRY, adj. [from substratus, Latin.] Substrary line is, in dialling, a right line, whereon the gnomon or style of a dial is erected at right angles with the plane.
Erect the style perpendicularly over the substrary line, so as to make an angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place.
SUBSULTIVE, adj. [from subsultus, Latin.] Bounding; moving by starts.
SUBSULTORY, adv. [from subsultus.] In a bounding manner.
The spirits spread even, and move not substantially; for that will make the parts close and plant.
SUBTANGENT, n. f. In any curve, is the line which determines the intersection of the tangent in the axis prolonged.
To SUBTEND, v. a. [from subtendere, Latin.] To be extended under.
In rectangles and triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle.
From Aris rightways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle: now since the lines
Must three times touch the round, and meet three times,
Where e'er they meet in angles, those are trines.
SUBTENSE, n. f. [from subtensus, Latin.] The chord of an arch; that which is extended under any thing.
SUBTILER, [Latin.] In composition, signifies under.

SUBTILFLUOUS, adj. [from subtilis, Latin.] Running under.
SUBTILFUG, n. f. [from subtilis, Latin.] Running under.
A shift; an evasion; a trick.
The king cared not for subtilfuges, but would stand envy, and appear in any thing that was to his mind.
Notwithstanding all their fly subtilfuges and studied evasions, yet the product of all their endeavours is but as the birth of the labouring mountains, wind and emptiness.
Affect not little shifts and subtilfuges to avoid the force of an argument.
SUBTERRANEAL, adj. [from sub and terra, Latin.] Subterranean, Fr.
SUBTERRANEAN, adj. [from sub and terra, Latin.] Subterranean, Fr.
SUBTERRANEANNESS, n. f. [from subterraneus, Latin.] Lying under the earth; below the surface.
Metals are wholly subterranean, whereas plants are part above earth, and part under.
In subterranean, as the fathers of their tribes, are brimstone and mercury.
The force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the flatter'd fide
Of thund'ring Aetna, whose combustible
And fuel'd entrails thence conceiving fire,
Sublim'd with mineral fury, aid the winds.
Alteration

SUB

- Alteration proceeded from the change made in the neighbouring subterranean parts by that great conflagration.
Tell by what paths, what subterranean ways,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The reluctant rivers.
Let my soft minutes glide obscurely on.
Like subterraneous streams, unheard, unknown.
This subterraneous passage was not at first designed so much for a highway as for a quarry.
Rous'd within the subterranean world,
Th' expanding earthquake unreluctant shakes Aspiring cities.
SUBTERRANITY, n. f. [from sub and terra, Latin.] A place under ground. Not in use.
We commonly consider subterraneities, not in contempla-tions, sufficiently respective unto the creation.
SUBTILE, adj. [from subtilis, Fr. subtilis, Latin.] This word is often written subtle.
1. Thin; not dense; not gross.
From his eyes the fleeting fair
Retird, like subtle smoke dissolv'd in air.
Deny Des Cart his subtle matter,
You leave him neither fire nor water.
Is not the heat conveyed through the vacuum by the vibrations of a much subtiler medium than air, which, after the air was drawn out, remained in the vacuum?
2. Nice; fine; delicate; not coarse.
But of the clock which in our breasts we wear,
The subtle motions we forget the while.
Thou only know'st her nature, and her pow'r;
Her subtle form thou only can'st define.
I do distinguish plain
Each subtle line of her immortal face.
3. Piercing; acute.
Pals we the slow disease and subtle pain,
Which our weak frame is destin'd to sustain;
The cruel stone, the cold catarrh.
4. Cunning; artful; sly; sordidous. In this sense it is now commonly written subtle.
Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtle witted and a marvellous fair spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction.
Think you this York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you?
O subtle love, a thousand wiles thou hast
By humble suit, by service, or by hire,
To win a maiden's hold.
A woman, an harlot and subtle of heart.
Nor thou his malice, and false guile, contempt:
Subtle he needs must be, who could seduce Angels.
5. Deceitful.
Like a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw.
6. Refined; acute beyond exactness.
Things remote from use, obscure and subtle.
SUBTILLY, adv. [from subtile.]
1. Finely; not grossly.

The act of making thin.
By subtilization and rarefaction the oil contained in grapes,
if distilled before it be fermented, becomes spirit of wine.
SUBTILITY, n. f. [from subtilis, French; from subtile.]
1. Thinness; fineness; exility of parts.
The subtilities of particular fads may pass through small crannies not confuted, but its magnity not so well.
How shall we this union well express?
Nought ties the soul, her subtilty is such.
The corporeity of all bodies being the same, and subtilty in all bodies being essentially the same thing, could any body by

SUB

- subtily become vital, then any degree of subtilty would produce some degree of life.
Bodies the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading and self-diffusive are they.
2. Nicety.
Whatever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or subtilty of the motion, is little enquired.
3. Refinement; too much acuteness.
You prefer the reputation of candour before that of subtily.
Intelligible discourses are spoiled by too much subtilty in nice divisions.

Who needful science mock'd, and arts of use;
Mankind with idle subtilties embroil,
And fashion systems with romantick toil.
They give method, and shed subtilty upon their author.
4. Cunning; artifice; slyness.
Finding force now faint to be,
He thought grey hairs afforded subtilty.
The rudeness and barbarity of savage Indians knows not so perfectly to hate all virtues as some mens subtilty.
Sleights proceeding
As from his wit and native subtilty.
SUBTILIZATION, n. f. [from subtilizare.]
1. Subtilization is making any thing so volatile as to rise readily in steam or vapour.
Fluids have their resistances proportional to their densities, so that no subtilization, division of parts, or refining can alter these resistances.
2. Refinement; superfluous acuteness.
To SUBTILIZE, v. a. [from subtilizare, French; from subtile.]
1. To make thin; to make less gross or coarse.

is further subtilized, and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the thinner and finer part easily finds way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins.
Body cannot be vital; for if it be, then is it so either as subtilized or organized, moved or endowed with life.
2. To refine; to spin into useless niceties.
The most obvious verity is subtilized into niceties, and spun into a thread indiscernible by common optics.
To SUBTILIZE, v. n. To talk with too much refinement.
Qualities and moods some modern philosophers have sub-tilized on.
SUBTILE, adj. [Written often for subtle, especially in the sense of cunning.] Sly; artful; cunning.
Some subtle headed fellow will put some quirk, or devise some evasion, whereof the rest will take hold.
Shall we think the subtle witted French
Conjurers and foretellers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verse have thus contriv'd his end?
The serpent, subtil beast of all the field.
The Arabians were men of a deep and subtle wit.
SUBTILY, adv. [from subtile.]
1. Slyly; artfully; cunningly.
Thou see'st how subtly to detain thee I devise;
Inviting thee to hear, while I relate.
2. Nicely; delicately.
In the nice bee, what sense do subtly true,
From poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew!
To SUBTRACT, v. a. [from subtrahere, Latin.] They who derive it from the Latin write subtrahere; those who know the French original, write subtrahere, which is the common word.
Reducing many things into charge, which, by confusion, became concealed and subtrah'd from the crown.
What is subtrah'd or subducted out of the extent of the divine perfection, leaves still a quotient infinite.
The same swallow, by the subtrahing daily of her eggs,
lay nineteen successively, and then gave over.
SUBTRACTION, n. f. See SUBTRACTION.
SUBTRAHEND, n. f. [from subtrahendum, Latin.] The number to be taken from a larger number.

 Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.
 If the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded to him in copartnership, without prelation or preference of the eldest to a double portion. Hale.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.
 While these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
 Burnt-off rings morn and evening shall be thine,
 And fires eternal in thy temples shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of lampoons are yet of dangerous example to the publick: some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing sense with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the same title, succeeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

3. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.
 'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition: imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

SUC

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state;
 Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail:
 Sport at court, or Japhet in a jail. Pope.

4. To terminate according to wish.
 If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Job. iv. 6.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate, because of the severity of the Roman language: Spencer endeavoured it in Shepherd's Kalender; but neither will it succeed in English. Dry.

5. To go under cover.
 Please that silvan scene to take,
 Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
 Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
 Whole mouth the curling vines have overspread. Dryden.

To SUCCEED. v. a.
 1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.
 In that place no creature was hurtful unto man, and those destructive effects they now discover succeeded the curse, and came in with thorns and briars. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To prosper; to make successful.
 Now frequent times the happier lights among,
 And high-maid's love from his dark prison freed,
 Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
 Will gloriously the new laid works succeed. Dryden.

Succeed my wish, and second my design,
 The fairest Deiopeia shall be thine,
 And make thee father of a happy line. Dryden's En.

SUCCEEDER. n. s. [from succeed.] One who follows; one who comes into the place of another.

Why should calamity be full of words?
 Windy attorneys to their client woes,
 Airy succeeders of intestate joys,
 Poor breathing orators of miseries! Shakespeare's R. III.

Now this great succeeder all repairs,
 He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
 Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood.
 Nature has so far imprinted it in us, that should the envy of predecessors deny the secret to succeeders, they yet would find it out. South.

They make one man's particular fancies, perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them to their succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness as presumption. Boyle.

SUCCESSION. n. s. [succes, French; succesio, Latin.]
 1. The termination of any affair happy or unhappy. Succes without any epithet is commonly taken for good success.

3. A chemical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that insipid metal, and four salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of com- mon sugar. Boyle.

SUI

To SUGAR, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar.

Short thick fobs

In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,

That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest

Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,

Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself

In general riot, and never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect, but followed

The sugar'd game before thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

With devotion's village,

And pious actions we do sugar o'er

The devil himself. Shakespeare.

His glowing fire his errand daily laid,

And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,

But flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,

And poison in high calld meats conveys. Drum.

With the suggary sweet thereof allure</

- SUIT. n. f. [suite, French.]
 1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.
 We, ere the day, two suits of armour fought,
 Which borne before him, on his steed he brought. Dryd.
 2. Cloaths made one part to answer another.
 What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits is wonderful. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Him all repute
 For his device in handing a suit;
 To judge of lace, pink, pines, print, cut, and plait.
 Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.
 His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of cloaths, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.
 3. Confection; series; regular order.
 Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weathers comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.
 4. Out of Suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.
 Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
 That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shak.
 5. [Suite, French.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.
 Plectrus's ill-led life, and worse gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Ty-deus and Telenus, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.
 6. [From To Sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.
 Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakespeare.
 She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
 And then dreams be of smelling out a suit. Shakespeare.
 Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.
 Many shall make suit unto thee. Job xi. 19.
 My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been Poison'd with love to see or to be seen;
 I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew;
 Yet went to court. Donne.
 7. Courtship.
 He that hath the steerage of my course,
 Direct my suit. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
 Their determinations are to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suits, unless you may be won by some other fort than your father's imposition. Shakespeare.
 8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit, prosecution.
 High amongst all knights haft hung thy shield,
 Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest thookest;
 And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.
 9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment. Asyliffe.
 All that had any suits in law came unto them. Sylva.
 Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause.
Bacon's War with Spain.
 Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great perfonages. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
 To Alibech alone refer your suit. Dryden.
 And let his sentence finish your dispute.
 John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.
 To SUIT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To fit; to adapt to something else.
Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so *suit*d to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.
 2. To be fitted to; to become.
 Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
 Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
 Her purple habit fits with such a grace
 On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.
 If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as *suit*d their distinct hypotheses. Locke.
 Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
 Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.
 3. To dress; to clothe.
 Such a Sebastian was my brother too;
 So went he *suit*d to his wary tomb;
 If spirits can assume both form and suit,
 You come to fright us. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 Be better *suit*d;
 These weeds are memories of those misfortunes;
 I'll dress thee put them off to woful hours. Shakespeare.
 I'll disrobe me
 Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
 As do's a Briton peasant. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

- To SUIT. v. n. To agree; to accord.
 The one intense, the other still remiss;
 Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove Tedious alike. Milley.
 The place itself was *suit*d to his care.
 Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair,
 Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.
 Confract does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.
 This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.
 Give me not an office
 That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Shak.
SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] - Fitting; according with; agreeable to.
 Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.
 What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.
 To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hook.
 It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman Church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.
 As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Auricular.
 Expression is the dress of thought, and fill Appears more decent, as more suitable;
 A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
 Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.
SUITABLENESS. n. f. [from suitable.] Fitness; agreeableness.
 In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glaville.
 With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South's Sermon.
 He creates those sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South's Sermon.
 Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.
SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.
 Whoever speaks upon a certain occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text.

 court of their lord. Bailey.
SUITER. n. f. [from suit.]
SUITOR. n. f. [from suit.]
 1. One that sues; a petitioner; a suppliant.
 As humility is in suitors a decent virtue, so the testimony thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a found apprehension of his supereminence glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hook.
 She hath been a suitor to me for her brother.
 Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
 My pitious foul began the wretchedness
 Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.
 Not only bind their own hands, but bind the hand of suit- ors also from offering. Bacon.
 Yet their port
 Not of mean suitors; nor important less Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair, Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
 The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
 Of Themis flood devout. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 I challenge nothing;
 But I'm an humble suitor for these prisoners. Donne.
 My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Raie.
 2. A woer; one who courts a mistress.
 I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart;
 for truly I love none.
 A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shakespeare.
 He pass'd a year at Goody under the counsels of his mother, and then became a suitor at London to Sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Wotton's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.
 By many suitors fought, he mocks their pains,
 And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.
 He drew his seat, familiar, to her side;
 Far from the suitor train, a brutal crowd. Pope's Ossian.
SUITRESS.

- SUITRESS. n. f. [from suiter.] A female suppliant.

 3. [Summe, Fr.] Compendium; abridgement; the whole abstracted.
 This, in effect, is the sum and substance of that which they bring by way of opposition against those orders, which we have common with the church of Rome. Hooker.
 They replenish'd the hearts of the nearest unto them with words of memorable consolation, strengthened men in the fear of God, gave them whollome instructions of life, and confirm'd them in true religion; in sum, they taught the world's life virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
 This.

SUM

This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum.
Of wisdom. Milton.

That knowledge is so very superficial, and so ill-grounded, that it is impossible for them to describe in what consists the beauty of those works. Dryden.
SUPERFICIALITY. n. s. [from superficialis.] The quality of being superficial.
By these faults the colours of bodies receive degrees of lustre or obscurity, superficiality or profundity. Brown.
SUPERFICIALLY. adv. [from superficialis.]
1. On the surface; not below the surface.
2. Without penetration; without close heed.
Perspective hath been with some diligence inquired; but the nature of sounds in general hath been superficially observed. Bacon's Natural History.
His eye so superficially surveys
These things, as not to mind from whence they grow, Deep under ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Without going deep; without searching to the bottom of things.
You have said well;
But on the cause and question now in hand;
Have glaz'd but superficially. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
I have laid down superficially my present thoughts. Dryden.
SUPERFICIALNESS. n. s. [from superficialis.]
1. Shallowness; position on the surface.
2. Slight knowledge; false appearance; show without substance.
SUPERFICIES. n. s. [Latin.] Outside; surface; superifice.
He on her superficies stretch'd his line. Sandys.
A convex mirror makes objects in the middle to come out from the superficies; the painter must, in respect of the light and shadows of his figures, give them more rilievo. Dryden.
SUPERFINE. adj. [from super and fine.] Eminently fine.
Some, by this journey of Jason, understand the mystery of the philosopher's stone: to which also other superfine chymists draw the twelve labours of Hercules. L'Estrange.
If you observe your cyder, by interposing it between a candle and your eye, to be very transparent, it may be called superfine. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SUPERFLUITANCE. n. s. [from super and fluitare, Latin.] The act of floating above.
Sperma ceti, which is a superfluitance on the sea, is not the spem of a whale. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SUPERFLUITANT. adj. [from superfluitans, Lat.] Floating above.
A chaly earth, beated and steeped in water, affordeth a cream or fatness on the top, and a gross substance at the bottom: out of the cream, or superfluitance, the finest dishes are made; out of the residue, the counter. Brown.
SUPERFLUITY.

SUP

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Have I
Been out of fondness superstitious to him?
And am I thus rewarded? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Nature's own work it seem'd, nature taught art,
And to a superstitious eye the haunt
Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton.

A venerable wood,
Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair
Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.

2. Over accurate; scrupulous beyond need.
SUPERSTITIOUSLY. adv. [from superstitious.] In a superstitious manner.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously, and superstitiously pursued.
Watts's Logick.
To SUPERSTRAIN. v. a. [super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note. Bacon.

To SUPERSTRUCT. v. a. [superstruere, superstruere, Latin.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded. Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the virtuous Christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocency and then virtue. Decay of piety.

SUPERSTITION. n. f. [from superstruere.] An edifice raised on any thing.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructures upon an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure, be it never so gross. Hammond.

SUPERSTRUCTURE. n. f. [super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. Saunders's Sermons.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church, and is a superstructure upon the Christian religion. Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructure of study. Dryden.

SUPERSTANTIAL. adj. [super and substantial.] More than substantial.

SUPINELY. adv. [from supine.] 1. With the face upward.

2. Drowsily; thoughtlessly; indolently.

Who on the beds of sin supinely lie,
They in the fumes of their age shall die. Saunders.

The old impudent king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd;
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Aepus's legs, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

He panting on thy breast supinely lies,
While with thy heavenly form he feeds his famish'd eyes. Dryden's Lucius.

Beneath a verdant laurel's shade,
Horace, immortal bard, supinely laid. Prior.

Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thyself? and rather chuse
To lie supinely, hoping heaven will bless Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd? Philips.

SUPINITY. n. f. [from supine.] 1. Posture with the face upward.

2. Drowsiness; carelessness; indolence.

When this door is open to let dissenters in, considering their industry and our supinities, they may in a very few years grow to a majority in the house of commons. Swift.

SUPINITY. n. f. [from supine.] 1. Posture of lying with the face upward.

2. Carelessness; indolence; thoughtlessness.

The fourth cause of error is a supinity or neglect of enquiry, even in matters wherein we doubt, rather believing than going to see. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUPPEDANEUS. adj. [sub and pēs, Latin.] Placed under the feet.

He had slender legs, but encreased by riding after meals; that is, the humour descend'd upon their pendulosity, they having no support or suppedaneus stability. Brown.

SUPPER. n. f. [supper, French. See SUP.] The last meal of the day; the evening repast.

To-night we hold a solemn supper. Shakespeare.

2. To displace by stratagem; to turn out.

It is Philoclea his heart is set upon; it is my daughter I have borne to supplant me. Sidney.

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude. Shakespeare.

3. To displace; to overpower; to force away.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear, if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say, I wrong'd the duke. Shakespeare.

SUPPLANTER. n. f. [from supplant.] One that supplants; one that displaces.

SUPPLE. adj. [supple, French.] 1. Pliant; flexible.

The joints are more supple to all seats of activity in youth than afterwards. Bacon.

Will ye submit your necks, and chafe to bend
The supple knee? Milton's Parad. Lost.

And sometimes went, and sometimes ran
With supple joints, as lively vigorous led. Milton.

No women are apt to spin linen well than the Irish, who labouring little in any kind with their hands, have their fingers more supple and soft than other women of the poorer condition in England. Temple.

2. Yielding; soft; not obstinate.

When we've stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have supple souls
Than in our priestlike falls. Shakespeare.

Ev'n softer than thy own, of suppler kind,
More exquisite of taste, and more than man refin'd. Dryden.

If punishment reaches not the mind, and makes not the will supple, it hardens the offender. Locke.

3. Flattering; fawning; bending.

There is something to supple and insinuating in this absurd unnatural doctrine, as makes it extremely agreeable to a prince's ear. Addison.

Each part deriv'd of supple government, Shall stiff, and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakespeare.

To SUPPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] 1. To make pliant; to make soft; to make flexible.

Poultices allaying pain, drew down the humours, and suppl'd the parts, thereby making the passages wider. Temple.

To supple a carcass, drench it in water. Arbutnot.

2. To make compliant.

Knaves having by their own importunate suit,
Convinc'd or suppl'd them, they cannot chuse,
But they must blab. Shakespeare's Othello.

A mother pestifling till she had bent her daughter's mind, and suppl'd her will, the only end of correction, she establish'd her authority thoroughly ever after. Locke on Education.

To SUPPLE. v. n. To grow soft; to grow pliant.

The stones
Did first the rigour of their kind expel,
And suppl'd into softness as they fell. Dryden.

SUPPLEMENT. n. f. [supplementum, Fr. supplementum, Latin.] Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any main or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the scriptures perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth. Hooker.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness be imputed in supplement to what is lacking in ours. Rogers.

SUPPLEMENTAL. adj. [from supplement.] Additional; such

SUPPLEMENTARY. adj. as may supply the place of what is lost or wanting.

Supplemental acts of state were made to supply defects of laws, and so tonnage and poundage were collected. Clarendon.

Divinity would not then pass the yard and loom, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. Decay of Piety.

Provide his brood next Smithfield fair,
With supplemental hobby horses;
And happy be their infant courtesies. Prior.

SUPPLENESS. n. f. [suppleness, Fr. from supple.] 1. Pliantness; flexibility; readiness to take any form.

The fruit is of a pleasant taste, caused by the suppleness and gentleness of the juice, being that which maketh the boughs also to be flexible. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Readiness of compliance; facility.

Study gives strength to the mind, conversation grace; the first apt to give stiffness, the other suppleness. Temple.

A compliance and suppleness of their wills, being by a steady hand introduced by parents, will seem natural to them, preventing all occasions of struggling. Locke.

SUPPLETORY. n. f. [suppletorium, Latin.] That which is to fill up deficiencies.

That suppletory of an implicit belief is by Romanists conceived sufficient for those not capable of an explicit. Ham.

To those legions your levy
Must be suppliant. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To bow and sue for grace with suppliant knee. Milton.

The rich grow suppliant, and the poor grow proud;
Thou offer mighty gain, and these ask more. Dryden.

Constant to his first decree,
To bow the haughty neck, and raise the suppliant knee. Prior.

SUPPLIANT. n. f. [from the adjective.] An humble petitioner; one who begs submissively.

A petition from a Florentine I undertook, Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant. Shakespeare.

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Hourly suitors come:
The east with incense and the west with gold,
Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom. Dryden.

Spare this life, and hear thy suppliants prayer. Dryden.

SUPPLICANT. n. f. [from supplique.] One that entreats or implores with great submission; an humble petitioner.

The prince and people of Nineveh assembling themselves as a main army of suppliants, God did not withstand them. Hooker.

The wife suppliant, though he prayed for the condition he thought most desirable, yet left the event to God. Rogers.

Abraham, instead of indulging the suppliant in his desire of new evidence, refers him to what his brethren had. Atterbury.

To SUPPLICATE. v. n. [supplicare, Fr. supplicare, Lat. from supplex.] To implore; to entreat; to petition submissively and humbly.

Many things a man cannot with any comeliness say or do, a man cannot brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

Further the kingdoms and the nations come,
In supplicating crowds to learn their doom. Addison.

SUPPLICATION. n. f. [supplication, Fr. from supplicare.] 1. Petition humbly delivered; entreaty.

My lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill. Shakespeare.

My mother bows.
As if Olympus to a mole-hill should
In supplication nod. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Petitionary worship; the adoration of a suppliant or petitioner.

Praying with all prayer and supplication, with all perseverance and supplication for all faults. Eph. vi. 18.

Bend thine ear
To supplication; hear his sighs though mute. Milton.

These prove the common practice of the worship of images in the Roman church, as to the rites of supplication and adoration, to be as extravagant as among the heathens. Stillington.

We should testify our dependence upon God, and our confidence of his goodness by constant prayers and supplications for mercy. Tillotson.

To SUPPLY. v. a. [supplere, Lat. supplere, French.] 1. To fill up as any deficiencies happen.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys are their kearn supplied and maintained. Spenser.

2. To give something wanted; to yield; to afford.

They were princes that had wives, sons, and nephews; and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship. Bacon.

I wanted nothing fortune could supply,
Nor did the slumber 'till that hour deny. Dryden.

3. To relieve.

Although I neither lend nor borrow,
Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,
I'll break a custom. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. To serve instead of.

Burning ships the banish'd sun supply,
And no light shines but that by which men die. Waller.

5. To give or bring, whether good or bad.

Neerer care supplies
Sighs to my breast, and sorrow to my eyes. Prior.

6. To fill any room made vacant.

Uplust creatures to supply our vacant room.
The sun was set; and Vesper, to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Dryden.

7. To accommodate; to furnish.

While trees the mountain-tops with shades supply,
Your honour, name, and praise shall never die. Dryden.

The reception of light must be supplied by some open form of the fabric.

My lover, turning away several old servants, supplied me with others from his own house. Swift.

SUPPLY. n. f. [from the verb.] Relief of want; cure of deficiencies.

I mean that now your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want. a Cor. viii. 14.

SUP

Art from that flow each just supply provides,
Works without flow, and without pomp presides. Pope.

To SUPPORT. v. a. [supporter, French; supportare, Ital.]

1. To sustain; to prop; to bear up.

The palace built by Pious, vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.

The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God, the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it.

2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.

Strongly to suffer and support our pains.
Couldst thou support that burden? Milton.

This fierce demeanour, and his insolence,
The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.

3. To endure.

She scarce awake her eyes could keep,
Unable to support the fumes of sleep. Dryden.

None can support a diet of flesh and water without acids, as salt, vinegar, and bread, without falling into a putrid fever.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.

With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported. Milton.

SUPPORT. n. f. [support, French; from the verb.]

1. Act or power of sustaining.

Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support.

2. Prop; sustaining power.

3. Necessaries of life.

4. Maintenance; supply.

SUPPORTABLE. adj. [supportable, French; from support.]

Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shakespeare accuses the first syllable.

As great to me, as late, and supportable

To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker

Than you may call to comfort you. Shak. Temp.

Alterations in the project of uniting Christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent. Sw.

I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.

SUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from supportable.] The state of being tolerable.

SUPPORTANCE. n. f. [from support.] Maintenance; support.

SUPPORTATION. n. f. port. Both these words are obsolete.

Give some supportance to the bending twigs. Shakespeare.

His quarrel he finds scarce worth talking of, therefore draw for the supportance of his vow. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The benefited subject should render some small portion of his gains, for the supportance of the king's expence. Bacon.

SUPPORTER. n. f. [from support.]

1. One that supports.

You must walk by us upon either hand,
And good supporters are you. Shaksp. Macb. for Measure.

Because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a support, is not represented to the mind by any distinct idea. Locke.

2. Prop; that by which any thing is borne up from falling.

More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured. Bacon.

We shall be discharged of our load; but you, that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear. L'Estrange.

There is no loss of room at the bottom, as there is in a building set upon supporters. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Sustain; comforter.

The faints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries.

4. Maintainer; defender.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Walton.

All examples represent ingratitude as sitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning impiety. South.

Love was no more, when loyalty was gone,
The great supporter of his awful throne. Dryden.

SUPPORTABLE. adj. [from support.] That may be supported.

Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the fables of any supportable catalogue. Hammond.

SUPPORTAL. n. f. [from support.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.

Young Forinbras,
Holding a weak support of our worth,
Thinks our fate to be out of frame. Shakespeare.

SUP

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospects;
the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposals at least of a firm and sufficient bottom.

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers.

To SUPPOSE. v. a. [supposer, French; supponere, Latin.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.

Suppose some so negligent that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.

I tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over messengers. Shaksp.

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Ammon only is slain. 2 Sa. xiii. 32.

I suppose we should compel them to a quick refusal. Milton.

4. To require as previous to itself.

This supposes something, without evident ground.

One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quixote.

SUPPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevincenced conceit.

That we come short of our supposes to far,
That after seven years siege, yet Troy-walls stand? Shaksp.

Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
Fit to be trusted on a bare supposé. Dryden's Cleomenes.

That he is honest?

SUPPOSE. n. f. [from suppose.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine.

While counterfeit supposers bleed thine eyes. Shaksp. Lear.

SUPPOSITION. n. f. [supposition, French; from supponere.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient;
yet his means are in supposition. Shaksp. Lear.

Sing, tyren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs;
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shaksp.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.

Such an original irreducible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIOUS. adj. [from supponere, suppositus, Latin.] Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious.

It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from supposititious.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPOSITIVELY. adv. [from supposé.] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively.

SUPPOSITORY. n. f. [suppositoire, Fr. suppositivum, Latin.]

A kind of solid clyster.

Nothing relieves the head more than the piles, therefore suppositories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried. Arb.

To SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprimere, suppressus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.

Gloster would have armour out of the Towers.

To crown himself king and suppress the prince. Shak. Ham.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger. Devlin on Ireland.

Sir William Herbert, with a well armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hay.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.

Things not reveal'd, which th' invisible King,
Only omniscient, hath suppress'd in night. Milton.

Still she suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, the indirectly mentions it. Browne's Net on the Oblique.

SUP

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well didn't thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils. Shaksp.

SUPPRESSION. n. f. [suppression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from suppress.]

1. The act of suppressing.

2. Not publication.

You may depend upon a suppression of these verses. Pope.

SUPPRESSOR. n. f. [from suppress.] One that suppresses, crushes, or conceals.

To SUPPURATE. v. a. [from pus puris, Lat. suppurare, Fr.]

To generate pus or matter.

This disease is generally fatal: if it suppurates the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefaction.
Arbutnot on Diet.

To SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus.

SUPURATION. n. f. [supuration, French; from suppurare.]

1. The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards a supuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wiseman.

This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to supurations. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The matter suppurated.

The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has seethed inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the supuration. South.

SUPPRACTIVE. adj. [suppractif, French; from suppurare.]

Digitive; generating matter.

SUPPUTATION. n. f. [supputation, French; supputo, Latin.]

Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder on Time.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without a period. Wiff.

To SUPPUTE. v. a. [from supputo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate.

SUPRA. [Latin] in composition, signifies above, or before.

SUPRALARY. adj. [supra and lary, Latin.] Antecedent to the fall of man.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Collier.

SUPREMACY. n. f. [from supremus.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shaksp. K. John.

I am afraid that women
Seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shaksp.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton.

Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion: he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is already granted from the distinguishing character of your writing.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man, }
In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Latin.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superior is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it inveteth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

This strength, the feat of Deity supreme. Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by flow degrees;

SUR

Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

2. Highest; most excellent.

My foul akes

To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion

May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

No single virtue we could most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;

For she was all in that supreme degree,
That as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n

The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command. Dryden.

SUPREME. adv. [from the adjective.] In the highest degree.

The starving chemist in his golden views
Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.

SUR. [sur, French.] In composition, means upon or over and above.

Give some surance that thou art revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels. Shaksp.

To SURBATE. v. a. [surbatur, French.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.

Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxens feet. Mortimer.

SURBEAT. The participle passive of surbate.

A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight on Lybick ocean wide,
Elpy a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equal prey hope to divide. Fairy Queen.

To SURCEASE. v. n. [sur and cessare, French; cessare, Latin.]

1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.

Small favours will my prayers increase:
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to out own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.

To SURCEASE. v. a. To stop; to put to an end. Obsolete.

All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease. Spenser.

SURCEASE. n. f. Cessation; stop.

It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease unto all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

SURCHARGE. n. f. [surcharge, French; from the verb.] Overburden;
more than can be well born.

The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon's Natural History.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another. L'Estrange.

To SURCHARGE. v. a. [surcharger, French.] To overload;
to overburthen.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romefcot, the which might not surcharge
the tenant or freeholder. Spenser on Ireland.

Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Kneller's History of the Turks.

More remov'd,
Left heav'n surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears

Without the vent of words. Milton's Paradise Lost.

25 T When

SUR

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears,
 Sure the is dress'd in Melephinda's tears;
 Your head reclin'd, as hiding grief from view,
 Droops like a rose, surcharm'd with morning dew. Dryden.

SURCHARGER. n. f. [from surcharge.] One that overburthens.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
 Their swords, their shields, their surcoats were the fame. Dry.

SURD. adj. [from surdus, Latin.]

1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.
2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.
3. Not expressed by any term.

SURE. adj. [from sure, French.]

1. Certain; unfailling; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Psalms xix. 7.

Who knows,
 Let this be good, whether our angry foe
 Can give it, or will ever? How he can,
 Is doubtful; that he never will, is sure. Milt. Parad. Lost.

2. Certainly doomed.

Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it: sending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Lake.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.

Friar Laurence met them both;
 Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
 But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it. Shakespeare.

Let no man seek what may befall;
 Evil he may be sure. Milton.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
 That 'till the night their life they can secure. Denham.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
 Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agen?
 In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
 Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the file. Waller.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
 And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger.

To prove a genuine birth,
 On female truth assenting faith relies:
 Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded on a fair maternal fame. Pope's Odyssey.

SUR

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vicious expression: more properly be sure.

Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who conversed perpetually with them. Albany.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some. Arbutnot.

SURE. adv. [from sursum, French.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state
 Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakespeare.

Her looks were flush'd, and fullen was her mien,
 That sure the virgin goddess, had she been Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen. Addison.

Sure the queen would with him still unknown:
 She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence. Smith.

Sure, upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic.

SUREFOOTED. adj. [from sure and foot.] Treading firmly; not stumbling.

I see earnest sorrows, rooted miseries,
 Anguish in grains, vexations ripe and blown,
Surfatted griefs, solid calamities. Herbert.

SURELY. adv. [from sure.]

1. Certainly; undoubtedly; without doubt. It is often used rather to intend and strengthen the meaning of the sentence, than with any distinct and explicable meaning.

In the day that thou eat'st thereof thou shalt surely die. Gen. ii. 17.

Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive.
 He that created something out of nothing, surely can raise great things out of small. South.

I did not think
 This am'rous surfeiter would have don'd his helm
 For such a petty war. Shakespeare Ant. and Cleopatra.

SURFEITWATER. n. f. [from surfeit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold-distill'd poppywater, which is the true surfeit-water, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. f. [from surge, Latin.] A swelling sea; a wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-thak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,
 Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
 And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:
 I never did like molestation view
 On the enchain'd flood. Shakespeare Othello.

He trod the water,
 Whose enmity he flung aside, and breast'd
 The surge most swollen that met him. Shakespeare Tempest.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompassionate surges. Sandys.

The fulph'rous hail Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
 The fiery surge, that from the precipice
 Of heav'n receiv'd us falling. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy North:
 He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
 Pursues the foaming surge to the shore.
 Thence, near Minerva's swelling flood,
 With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep
 In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

To SURGE. v. n. [from surge, Latin.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main
 The surging waters like a mountain rise. Fairy Queen.

Be, all in rage, his sea-and fire besought,
 Some curst vengeance on his son to cast;
 From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. F. 2.

Up from the bottom turn'd by furious winds
 And surging waves, as mountains, to assault
 Heav'n's heights, and with the centre mix the pole. Milton.

Not with indented wave,
 Prone on the ground, as fince; but on his rear,
 Circular base of rising foils, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton's Parad. Lost.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
 Though all to fivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
 Vain battery; and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SUR

SURGEON. n. f. [Corrupted by conversation from chirurgæon.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could not receive some few of her dying words. Sid.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but withal, I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shakespeare Julius Cæsar.

He that hath wounded his neighbour, is tied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidences. Taylor.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain:
 The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
 And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

SURGERY. n. f. [for chirurgery.] The art of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unfound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service. Spenser.

But strangely visited people,
 The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakespeare Macbeth.

They are often tar'd over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar? Shakespeare.

SURLINESS. n. f. [from surly.] Gloomy moroseness; sour anger.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;
 None greets; for none the greeting will return;
 But in dumb surlyness, each arm'd with care,
 His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden.

SURLING. n. f. [from surly.] A sour morose fellow. Not used.

These four surlyings are to be commended to fleur Gaulard. Camden.

SURLY. adj. [from surly, four, Saxon.] Gloomily morose; rough; uncivil; sour; silently angry.

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
 That take it on you at the first so roundly. Shakespeare.

That surly spirit, melancholy,
 Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick;
 Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
 Making that idiot laughter keep mens eyes,
 And strain their cheeks to idle merriment. Shakespeare K. John.

Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,
 Without annoying me. Shakespeare Julius Cæsar.

Repuls'd by surly grooms, who wait before
 The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

 You lost a place, and fav'd a bribe?
 And then in surly mood came here
 To fifteen hundred pounds a year,
 And fierce against the whigs harang'd? Swift.

The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,
 Now soften'd into joy the surly storms. Thomson's Summer.

To SURMISE. v. a. [from surmise, French.] To suspect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exultation it rather surmiseth than conceiveth; somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not; yet very intensive desire thereof doth so incite it, that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and strifes of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. Tim. vi. 4.

SURMISE. n. f. [from surmise, French.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let go private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse, if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did, then are these censures frustrate. Hack.

They were by law of that proud tyrannell,
 Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmises,
 Condemned to that dungeon mercies,
 Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. F. 2.

Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart
 Will not permit my eyes once to behold
 The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise. Shakespeare.

My thought, whole murdering yet is but fantastical,
 Shakes to my single state of man, that function
 Is smother'd in surmise. Shakespeare Macbeth.

We double honour gain
 From his surmise prov'd false. Milton.

SUR

No sooner did they spy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises.
No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmises.

To SURMOUNT. v. a. [surmonter, French.]

1. To rise above.
The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds.

2. To conquer; to overcome.
Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day.

He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not surmounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet; but he rather chose a voluntary death.

3. To surpass; to exceed.
What surmounts the reach Of human sense, I shall delineate for,
By likening spiritual to corporeal forms,
As may express them best.

SURMOUNTABLE. adj. [from surmount, French.] Conquerable; surmountable.

SURMOUNT. n. f. [surmont, Lat.] A sort of fish.

SURNAME. n. f. [surnom, French.]

A very abstemious animal, by reason of its frugidity, and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. Maintenance.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.
SUSTURATION. n. f. [from susturro, Latin.] Whisper; soft murmur.
SUTE. n. f. [for sute.] Sort.
Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive that they are not of one sute. Hooker.
SUTLER. n. f. [suteler, Dutch; sutler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.
I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
Send to the sutler's; there you're sure to find
The bully match'd with rascals of his kind. Dryden.
SUTURE. n. f. [sutura, Latin.]
1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.
Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented; those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the glovers, the quill'd, the twisted and the dry sutures, but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp's Surgery.
2. Suture is a particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures. Quincy.
Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Arbuthnot.
SWAB. n. f. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.
To SWAB. v. a. [swabban, Saxon.] To clean with a mop.
It is now used chiefly at sea.
He made him swab the deck. Shirlock's Voyages.
SWABBER. n. f. [swabber, Dutch.] A sweeper of the deck.
The master, the swabber, the boatwain and I, Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery. Shak.
Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy. Dennis.
To SWADDLE. v. a. [swedan, Saxon.]
1. To swathe; to bind in cloaths, generally used of binding newborn children.
Invell'd by a veil of clouds,
And swaddled as new-born in fable throuds;
For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys.
How

S W A

How soon doth man decay!
When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,
To swaddle infants, whose young breath
Scarce knows the way;
Those cloths are little winding sheets,
Which do confign and fend them unto death. Herbert.
They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about an hundred yards of swathe. Addison.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.
Great on the bench, great in the fiddle,
That could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudibras.

SWADOLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Cloaths bound round the body.

I begged them to uncase me: no, no, say they; and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

SWADDLING-BAND. n. f. [from swaddle.] Cloth wrapped SWADDLING-CLOATH. n. f. round a new-born child.
SWADDLING-CLOUT. n. f.

From thence a fairy thee unwetting rest,
There as thou sleepest in tender swaddlingbands,
And her half elfin brood, there for thee left,
Such men do changelings call, so changed by fairies theft. Fairy Queen.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-bands. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.
To sink down by its weight; to lay heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall. Hott.
Being a tall fish, and with his scales much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Grew.

To SWAGE. v. a. [from affuage.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton.
Nor wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chafe Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds. Milton.

I will love thee,
Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine. Otway.

To SWAGGER. v. n. [swaggeren, Dutch, to make a noise;
pagan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? I quabble? I swagger? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine! Shak.

'Tis the rage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggers'd with me last night. Shakespeare.

Off a terrible oath, with a swagging accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood more approbation than proof itself. Shak.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge. Glavin. Scip.

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, drefs, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate. L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swaggers'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence, how weakly forever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swagging man that talks of nothing but demonstration. Tillotson.

To be great, is not to be fardched, and formal, and superci-ous; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our infe-riors. Collier on Pride.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause? to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

SWAGGERER. n. f. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

SWAGGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.
The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SWAIN. n. f. [from swamp.] A boggy; a fen.

1. A young man.
That good knight would not so high repair,
Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swain. F. 2.

2. A country servant employed in husbandry.

It were a happy life
A pastoral youth. Shak. Henry VI.

3. A pafforal youth.

Blest swains! whose nymphs in ev'ry grace excel;
Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well. Pope.

S W A

SWAINMOTE. n. f. [swainmote, law Lat.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest three in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair. The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest. Cowel.

To SWALE. v. a. [swale, Saxon, to kindle.] To waste or
To SWEAL. v. a. blaze away; to melt; as, the candle swales.

SWA'LET. n. f. Among the tin-miners, water breaking in upon the miners at their work. Brady.

SWA'LOW. n. f. [swale, Saxon.] A small bird of pittance, or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not Summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shak. Timon of Athens.

Daffodils,
That come before the swallow darses. Shakespeare.
The swallow make use of celandine, and the linnet of euphrasia. More.

When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

The swallow sweeps
The slimy pool, to build his hanging house Intent. Thomson's Spring.

To SWA'LOW. v. a. [swelzan, Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]

1. To take down the throat. Job vii. 19.

I swallow down my spite.

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakespeare's Henry V.

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do em-piricks pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Lact.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Lact.

3. To engross; to appropriate.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. 2 Sa.

Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallow'd up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulf.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare.

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave. Shak. Tit. Andron.

Death is swallow'd up in victory. 1 Cor. xv. 54.

If the earth open her mouth and swallow them up, ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. Nim. xii.

In bogs swallow'd up and lost.

He hid many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important. Deacy of Pity.

Nature would abhor
To be forced back again upon herself,
And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Should not the sad occasion swallow up
My other cares, and draw them all into it? Addison.

And late at night in swallowing earthquake funk. Thomson.

5. To devour; to destroy.

The necessary provision for life swallows the greatest part of their time. Lact.

Corruption swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd. Thomson's Autumn.

6. To be lost in any thing; to be given up.

The priest and the prophet are swallow'd up of wine. If.

SWA'LOW. n. f. [from the verb.] The throat; voracity.

Had this man of merit and mortification been called to account for his ungodly swallow, in gorging down the estates of helpless widows and orphans, he would have told them that it was all for charitable uses. South.

SWALLOWTAIL. n. f. A species of willow.

The shining willow they call swallowtail, because of the pleasure of the leaf. Bacon's Natural History.

SWALLOWWORT. n. f. A plant.

SWAMP. The pretence of swamp.

SWAMP. n. f. [swamm, Gothick; swan, Saxon; swamm, Mandick; swanna, Dutch; swamp, Danish; swamp, Swedish.]

A marsh; a bog; a fen.

SWAMPY. adj. [from swamp.] Boggy; fenny.

Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads. Thomson.

SWAN. n. f. [swan, Saxon; swan, Danish; swan, Dutch.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long and very straight neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.

Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed

S W A

feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Catma.

With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show, Shakespeare.

And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Let music found, while he doth make his choice; Shakespeare.

Then if he lose, he makes a swan like end.

I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide, Shakespeare.

And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

The birds easy to be drawn are plainpeds, or water-fowl,
as the mallard, goose, and swan. Peasam on Drawing.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry;
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;

A jarring found returns, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurm'ring to the floods. Dryden.

The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Lact.

SWANSKIN. n. f. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWAP. adv. [ad swapa, to do at a snatch, Mandick.] Hastily;
with hasty violence; as, he did it swap. A low word.

SWARD. n. f. [ward, Swedish.] See To SWOR.

1. The skin of bacon.

2. The surface of the ground; whence green sword, or green sword.

Water, kept too long, loosens and softens the sword, makes it subject to rustles and coarse grass. Note on i. refer.

The noon of night was past, when the foe
Came dreadful o'er the level sword, that lies Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse. A. Philips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the sword, and burn it. Martimer.

SWARE. The pretence of swear.

SWARM. n. f. [swarmen, Saxon; swarm, Dutch.]

1. A great body or number of bees or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid fly,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden's Æn.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general sway into your hands,
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster. Shakespeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found. Addison on Italy.

To SWARM. v. n. [swarmen, Saxon; swarmen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long Summer's day;
Some found the trumpet for the rest to swarm. Dryden.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd.

When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise,
if the weather hold. Martimer's Husbandry.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciles Macdonel,
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle. Shakespeare. Henry V.

What a multitude of thoughts at once Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear What from without comes often to my ears. Milton.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine;
In crowds around the swarming people join. Dryden's Æn.

3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.

These garriſons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers. Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl, her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals. Hewell.

Those days swarm'd with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after. Brown.

4. To breed multitudes.

Not to thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood of Gorgon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SWART. adj. [swart, Gothick; swart, Saxon; swart,

SWARTH. adj. Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawney.

A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarmed in every part. F. Queen.

S W A

A man

Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed huz,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Fairy Queen.

Whereas I was black and swart before;

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with; which you see. Shak. H. VI.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,

Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton.

2. In Milton it seems to signify black; gloomy; malignant.

Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks. Milton.

To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.

The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SWARTHILY. adv. [from swarth.] Blackly; duskyly; taw-nily.

SWARTHINESS. n. f. [from swarth.] Darkness of complexion;
tawnyness.

SWARTHY. adj. [See SWART.] Dark of complexion; black;
dusky; tawney.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarth Africans complain. Roscommon.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarth, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Here swarthly Charles appears, and there Addison.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;

Their swarthly hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the wars,
And making death more grim. Addison's Cato.

SWASH. n. f. [A cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work. Moxon.

To SWASH. v. n. To make a great clatter or noise; whence swashbuckler.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outdife,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances. Shakespeare.

Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing blow. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

SWASHER. n. f. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms.

I have observed these three swashers; three such anticks do not amount to a man. Shakespeare. Henry V.

SWATCH. n. f. A swathe. Not in use.

One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie;
As barlie in swatches may fill it thereby. Tusser.

SWATH. n. f. [swade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass cut down by the mower.

With tossing and raking, and setting on cox,
Grass, lately in swatches, is meat for an ox. Tusser.

The swathy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Shakespeare.

As soon as your grass is mown, if it lie thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it. Martimer.

2. A continued quantity.

An affection'd ass, that cons state without books, and utters it by great swaths. Shak. Twelfth Night.

3. [Sweban, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths. Grew.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, which they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe. Addison's Spectator.

To SWATHE. v. a. [swetan, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.

Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing cloaths,
This infant warrior, and his enterprizes, Shak. Henry IV.

Discomfited great Douglas.

He had two sons; the eldest of them at three years old,
I th' swathing cloaths the other, from their nursery.

Were stol'n. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie. Abet's Description of the World.

Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about. Dryden.

Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,

Or shows his loco-motive tricks. Prior.

To SWAY. v. a. [schweben, German, to move.]

1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield with facility: as, to sway the scepter.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil rise,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. F. Queen.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.
Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me, Shakespeare.
I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar. Shakespeare.
The only way to improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bowls run true by being made
On purpose false, and to be sway'd. Hadrian.
3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.
The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakespeare.
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says, you are the worthier maid. Shakespeare.
On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream, Sabrina is her name. Milton.
Take heed lest passion sway Thy judgment to do ought, which else free will Would not admit. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The judgment is sway'd by passion, and flored with lubricous opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glauco.
This was the race
To sway the world, and land and sea subdued. Dryden.
With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdued; yet those I sway'd. Dryden.
With powerful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd.
When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest. Tillotson.
- To SWAY, v. n.
1. To hang heavy; to be drawn by weight.
In these personal respects, the balance sways on our part. Bacon.
2. To have weight; to have influence.
The example of sundry churches, for approbation of one thing, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law. Hooker.
3. To bear rule; to govern.
The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never rage with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakespeare.
Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Were thou shalt monarch reign;
There didst not: there let him still victor sway. Milton.
- SWAY, n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.
To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton.
2. Anything moving with bulk and power.
Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth Shakes like a thing unfirm? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Expert
When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
Of battle. Milton.
3. Power; rule; dominion.
This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory, with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the foundness of belief. Hooker.
Only retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' helm,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Her father counts it dangerous
That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom halts her marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.
Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden's Aurengzeb.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison's Cato.
4. Influence; direction.
An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires, not before thought of. Sidney.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.
To SWEAR, v. n. preter. swore or sware, part. pass. sworn.
[swaran, Gothick; swenan, Saxon; sweren, Dutch.]
1. To obtest some superior power; to utter an oath.
If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numb.
These, these an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Tickel.

2. To declare or promise upon oath.
We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too. Shakespeare.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.
I would have kept my word;
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him. Gen.
Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Poliorcetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Plutarch.
3. To give evidence upon oath.
At what case
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To obtest the great name profanely.
Because of swearing the land mourneth. Jer. xxiii. 10.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word justly;
Swear not. Shakespeare's King Lear.
None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions. Tillotson.
- To SWEAR, v. a.
1. To put to an oath.
Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had stoutly sworn the children of Israel. Ex. xiii. 19.
Sworn ashore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck,
I'll be sworn. Shakespeare's Timon.
Let me swear you all to secrecy;
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.
2. To declare upon oath.
Now by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant!
—Who must hang them?
—Why, the honest men.
—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang them up. Shakespeare's Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain:
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his foul run for naught. Herbert.
Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Bacon.
It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift's Polite Conversation.
- SWEAT, n. s. [from swear, Saxon; swet, Dutch.]
1. The matter exhaled at the pores by heat or labour.
Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excreted. Bacon.
Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the pores, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of its as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.
When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part. Dryden.
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart.
Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Art.

The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.
- SWEEP, adj. [from sweep.] Sweeping, Sax. swet, Dutch.]
1. Pleasing to any sense.
Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense:
sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as mulick;
nor hath mulick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal Psalmist faith of a man, we took sweet counsel together;
and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.
2. Luscious to the taste.
This honey-tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

 play the sycophant. A low bad word.
 His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Government of the Tongue.
SY'CO'PHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Flattering; parasitical.
To SY'CO'PHANTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντω; from sycophant.] To play the flatterer. Did.
SYLLABICAL. adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.
SYLLABICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.
SYLLABICK. adj. [syllabique, French; from syllable.] Relating to syllables.
SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβη; syllabe, French.]
 1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.
 I heard
 Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.
 There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Mallet's Elements of Speech.
 2. Any thing proverbially concise.
 Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hosker.
 To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
 Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
 To the last syllable of recorded time;
 And all our yesterday have lighted fools
 The way to dusty death. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 He hath told to many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.
To SYLLABATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.
 Airy tongues that syllable mens names
 On fens and thores, and desert wildernesses. Milton.
SYLLABUS. n. f. [Ridly Syllabus, which see.] Milk and acids.
 No syllabus made at the milking pail,
 But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.
 Two lines would express all they lay in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabus and froth, without any solidity.
Felton on the Classics.
SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβη; syllabe, French.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.
SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμος; syllogisme, French.] An argument compos'd of three propositions: as, every man thinks;
Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.
 Unto them a piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Aesop beyond a syllogism in Barbara.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the first and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms? Bentley.
SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικος; from syllogism.] Relating to syllogisms.
SYLLOGISTIC. adj. relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.
 Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of
 it. Watts's Logic.
SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.
 A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogisti-cally; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Lectes.
To SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogize, French; συλλογιζω.] To reason by syllogism.
 Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing. Baker.
 Men have endeavour'd to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.
SYLVAN. adj. [Better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.
 Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
 A silvan scene! and as the ranks ascend,
 Shade above shade, a woody theatre
 Of stateliest view. Milton's Paradise Lost.

S Y M

- Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
 Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place. Pope.
SYLVAN. n. f. [silvan, French.] A wood-god, or satyr.
 When the sun begins to sing
 His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
 To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that silvan loves,
 Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.
 Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side;
 To lawless silvans all access deny'd. Pope.
SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, French; συμβολος; symbolon, Latin.]
 1. An abstrah; a compendium; a comprehensive form.
 Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.
 2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.
 Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.
 The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison on ancient Medals.
SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικος; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs.
 By this inchoachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.
 The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Taylor.
SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.
 This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.
 It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible sermon. Taylor.
SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.
 The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pha-rach, are oftentimes rack'd beyond their symbolizations.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symbolize, French; from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.
 Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.
 The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon's Natural History.
 Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Bentley.
 They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Hewel.
 I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. Morre.
 The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing
 it mightily desires. South's Sermons.
To SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.
 Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SYMMETRIAN. n. f. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.
 His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.
SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.
SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.
 Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.
Wotton's Architecture.
SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetrie, French; συμ and μετρον.]
 Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony;
 agreement of one part to another.
 She by whose lines proportion should be Exam'd, measure of all symmetry, Whom had that ancient seer, who thought souls made
 Of harmony, he would at next have said
 That harmony was she. Donne.
 And in the symmetry of her parts is found
 A pow'r, like that of harmony in found. Waller.
 Symmetry,

SYM

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. Mora.
Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathétique, Fr. from sympathy.]
SYMPATHETICK. } Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes, in the cure of diseases, not only from the last medicine and sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.
To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glavin. Scept.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetick and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHETICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympatizer, French; from sympathy.]
To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the maliffs in robustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare.

The thing of courage,
As rouz'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize. Shakespeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master to sympathize. Milton.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden's Daffodil.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Addison's Spectator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none console and sympathize more heartily than they. Catell on Kindness.

SYMPATHY. n. f. [sympathie, French; συμπάθεια.] Fellowship; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakespeare. H. VI.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

If there was a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it. Shakespeare.

I started back;
It started back: but pleas'd I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South's Sermon.

Can kindness to desert, like your's, be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men, and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYN

SYMPHONY. n. f. [symphonie, French; συνήχη.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton's Par. Lgt.

The trumpets found,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS. n. f. [σύν and φύσις.] Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connation, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wotton.

SYMPHYSIAC. adj. [sympphysique, French; συνφυσιακός.] Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symphysiac meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In some of those symphysiac disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetic part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. f. [symptome, French; σύνπτωμα.] 1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

2. A sign; a token.
Ten glorious campaigns are past, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMATIC. adj. [symptomatique, French; from symp.]
SYMPTOMATICK. } tan. Happening concurrently, or occasionally.

Symptomatic is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatic, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that.

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was dissipated; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatically, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wise's Surgery.

SYMPTOMATICALLY. adv. [from symptomatic.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wise.

SYNAGOGICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. f. [synagogue, French; συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakespeare.
As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath. Gospi.

SYNALEPHA. n. f. [συναληφή.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in a Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalepha, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHROSIS. n. f. [σύν and ἄρθρωσις.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wise's Surgery.

SYNCHONDRISIS. n. f. [σύν and χονδρῖσις.] The synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternum to the ribs.

SYNCHRONICAL. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchonical. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. f. [σύν and χρονισμός.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchonisim of all the parts of the Mosaisical chronology, after the Flood, bears a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hall.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.] Happening at the same time. The

SYN

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchonus and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot on Air.

SYNCOPE. n. f. [syncope, French; συνκοπή.] 1. Painting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wise.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off part.

SYNCOPEST. n. f. [from syncope.] Contricator of words.

To outline all the modern syncope, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spektor that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spektor.

SYNDICATE. v. n. [syndiquer, French; σύν and δική.] To judge; to pass judgement on; to censure. An unusual word.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master and all law makers before him. Hakewill on Providence.

SYNDROME. n. f. [σύνδρομη.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependence on such a syndrome of prequired motors. Glavin's Scept.

SYNECDOCHE. n. f. [synekche, French; συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synekche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

SYNECDOCHICAL. adj. [from synekche.] Expressed by a synekche; implying a synekche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and show you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synekdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle's Seraphick Love.

SYNECDOCHIS. n. f. [σύν and κόπη.] Synecchis is when the connexion is made by a ligament.

Of this in sympthesis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulations it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae. Wise's Surgery.

SYNOD. n. f. [synode, French; σύνδος.] 1. An assembly, particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
Twixt thy tedious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
I admit no traffic to our adverse towns.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let us call to synod all the blest,
Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton.

The second council of Nice he faith I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council. Stillington.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the pow'rs above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow.

How'er love's native hours are set,
Whate'er flary synod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die. Crahan.

Their planetary motions and aspects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbending. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may of themselves prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SYR

SYNODAL. adj. [synodique, French; from synod.]

SYNODICAL. adj. [synodique, French; from synod.]

1. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillington.

2. [Synodique, French.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month. Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.

SYNODICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Saunderson.

SYNONYMA. n. f. [συνώνυμα.] Names which signify the same thing.

To SYNONOMISE. v. a. [from synonyma.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymise after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid. Candell's Remains.

SYNONYMOUS. adj. [synonymus, Fr. συνώνυμος.] Expressing the same thing by different words.

These words consist of two propositions which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here. Tillot.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity. Bentley's Sermon.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words. Watts's Legick.

SYNONYMY. n. f. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

SYNOPSIS. n. f. [σύνολος.] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

SYNOPTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

We have collected so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use. Levy's Kalender.

SYNTACTICAL. adj. [from syntaxis, Latin.] 1. Conjoined; fitted to each other.

2. Relating to the construction of speech.

SYNTAX. n. f. [σύνταξις.] 1. A system; a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependence to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings. Glavin.

2. That part of Grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man that they do not so much as understand common Grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTHESES. n. f. [σύνθεσις.] The act of joining, opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton's Opticks.

SYNTHETICK. adj. [συνθετικός.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition.

Synthetick method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole; it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition. Watts's Legick.

SYPHON. n. f. [This should be written siphon; σίφων.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, siphon, or crane, and draw it off from its last feces into small bottles. Mortimer.

SYRINGE. n. f. [σφίγγξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins and force it out by the arteries through the whole body as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice. Ray.

To SYRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To spout by a syringe.

A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye was stop'd by the syringing up of oxyerate. Wise's Surgery.

2. To wash with a syringe.

SYRINGOTOMY. n. f. [σφίγγξ and τέχνη.] The act or practice of cutting fistulas or hollow sores. SYRTIS.

- SYRTIS*. n. f. [Latin.] A quick sand; a bog.
A boggy syrtis, neither sea, nor good dry land. Milton.
- SYSTEM*. n. f. [systeme, Fr. συστημα.]
1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.
2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.
3. A scheme which unites many things in order.
Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.
The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass. Watts.
- SYSTEMATICAL*. adj. [systematique, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.
It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of

- the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it. Bentley.
Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems. Watts.
- SYSTEMATICALLY*. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.
I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically. Boyle.
Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.
- SYSTOLE*. n. f. [syssole, Fr. συστολή.]
1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.
The syssole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size. Rev.
2. [Syssole, French.] In Grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

T,

A consonant, which, at the beginning and end of words, has always the same sound nearly approaching to the d; but before an i, when followed by a vowel, has the sound of an oblique s: as, nation, salvation, except when f precedes t: as, Christian, question.

TABBY. n. f. [tabi, tabino, Italian; tabis, French.] A kind of waved silk.

TABBY. adj. Brindled; brindled; varied with different colours.
Brocades, and tabbies, and gauzes. Swift.

A tabby cat sat in the chimney-corner.
On her tabby rival's face, Addison.

She deep will mark her new disgrace. Prior.

TABEFACITION. n. f. [tabefacio, Latin.] The act of wasting away.

To TABEFY. v. n. [tabefacio, Latin.] To waste; to be extenuated by disease. In the following example it is improperly a verb active.

- TALLY. n. f. [from tallier, to cut, Fr.]
1. A stick notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.
So right his judgment was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit. Hudibras, p. iii.
The only tallies in esteem at present are those of Exchange-Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays. Garth.
Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?
Her tallies usef'less lie and idle,
If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.
2. Any thing made to suit another.
So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other;
If any alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-sore to beholders. Dryden.
To TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out for any thing.
Nor sister either had, nor brother;
They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.

To TAMPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Latin.]
1. To be busy with physick.
'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras, p. ii.
He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.
That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Deacy of Piety.
'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Reveries.
Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but repenting next morning, repaired to the king and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison's Freeholder.

Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream. Shakep.

I do, quoth he, perceive

My king is tangl'd in affection to

A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakep.

You must lay line to tangle her desires

By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes

Shall be full fraught with servicable vows. Shakep.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,

Stands with the flowers of war to tangle thee. Shakep.

Now by'th victorious

Among thy slain fell-kill'd,

Not willingly, but tangl'd in the fold

Of dire necessity. Milton's Agonistes.

Skil'd to retire, and in retiring draw

Hearts after them, tangl'd in amorous nets. Milton.

With subtle cobweb cheats,

They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;

In which when once they are entangl'd,

The more they stir, the more they're tangl'd. Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarras.

When my simple weakness strays,

Tangl'd in forbidden ways:

He, my shepherd! is my guide,

He's before me, on my side. Craffatu.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.

Old with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare. Shak.

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning to comfort them for the dead. Jer. xvi. 7.

3. To break by violence.

In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

As storms the skies, and torrents tear the ground,
Thus rag'd the prince, and fatter'd death around. Dryden.

Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God destroys fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government torn in pieces, and shared by his subjects. Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair. Dryden.

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb,
At least thou art from some fierce tygers come;
Or on rough seas from their foundation torn,
Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.

6. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the Christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

To TEAR, v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To fume; to rave; to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the inuendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a moule. L'Estrange's Fables.

TEARER, n. f. [from tear.] He who rends or tears.

TEARFALLING, adj. [tear and fall.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in
So far in blood, that fin will pluck on fin, Tearfalling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakespeare.

TEARFUL.

TED

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.
Is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakespeare.
This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dries the tearful sluices of despair:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught th' exalted mind
All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope's Odyssey.
On Celadon her eye

Fell tearful, wetting her disorder'd cheek. Thomson.
TO TEASE. v. a. [teap, Saxon.]

estate. Spectator, No. 475.
After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.
We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. f. [teap, Saxon; displacus, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the teasel hath no proper calyx, but leaves representing the perianthium encompassing the bottom of the head: the little flowers which are produced singly from between the scales, are collected into an head somewhat like a bee-hive; these are succeeded by longish four-cornered seeds:
the species are three: one is called carduus fullonum, and is of singular use in raising the knap upon woollen cloth. Miller.

TEASER. n. f. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incitant importunity.
A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT. n. f. [teib, Welsh; te, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teten, French.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakespeare.
Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.
When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It more pleas'd my sense

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat dissent
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury of a body. Locke.

TECHY. adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to wooce,
As she is Rubben-chaste against all fate. Shakespeare.
When it did take the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

TECHONICK. adj. [τεχνικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.
TO TED. v. a. [teaban, Saxon, to prepare.] To lay grafs newly mown in rows.

TEE

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tediculus, Fr. tedium, Latin.]
1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.
That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words.
The one intente, the other still remits,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.
2. Wearisome by prolixity.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker, b. i.

3. Slow.
Chief mastery to dissent
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton.

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tedious.]
1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.
In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.
Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.
In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often, to interrupt them; which tedious-ness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker, b. i.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

She diffates them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

TEEM. v. n. [team, Saxon, to creak.]

The tendons some compacted close produce,
And some thin fibres for the skin diffuse. Blackmore

TENDRIL. n. f. [tendrillon, French.] The clasp of a vine, or other climbing plant.
In wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils; which imply'd Subjection. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

So may thy tender blossoms fear no blite;
Not goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite. Dryden
The tendrils or clasps of plants are given only to such as have weak stalks, and cannot raise up or support themselves.
Ray on the Creation

TENERICLOSE. adj. [tenebricosus, tenebricus, Latin.] Dark; TENEBOUS. adj. gloomy.
TENEBOUSITY. n. f. [tenebra, Lat.] Darkness; gloom.

TENEMENT. n. f. [tenementum, law Latin.] Any thing held by a tenant.
What reasonable man will not think that the tenement shall be made much better, if the tenant may be drawn to build himself some handsome habitation thereon, to ditch and inclose his ground? Spenser on Ireland

'Tis policy for father and son to take different sides;
For then lands and tenements commit no treason. Dryden
Who has informed us, that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontpiece. Locke

Treat on, treat on, is her eternal note,
And lands and tenements glide down her throat. Pope
TENENT. n. f. See TENET.

TENERITY. n. f. [teneritas, tener, Lat.] Tenderness. Ainsl.
TENESMUS. n. f.
The stone shutting up the orifice of the bladder, is attended with a tenesmus, or needing to go to stool. Arbutnot

TENET. n. f. [tenet, Latin.] Possessive principle; opinion.
That all animals of the land are in their kind in the sea,
although received as a principle, is a tenet very questionable.
Bacon's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

While, in church matters, profit shall be the touch-stone for faith and manners, we are not to wonder if no gainful tenet be deposed. Decay of Piety
This favours of something ranker than socinianism, even the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded only upon faintship. South's Sermons

They wonder men should have mistook
The tenets of their master's book. Prior TENNIS. n. f. [this play is supposed by Skinner to be so named from the word tenet, take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls. Shak.
There was he gaming, there o'ertook in's rowle,
There falling out at tennis. Shakespeare Hamlet

A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddess. Hoswell's Vocal Forest
It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page. Peacocks

The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again;
for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused. Moré's Antidote against Abuse

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, and consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.
Locke

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses. Arbutnot and Pope
To TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball.

Those four garçons lifting forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself. Spenser on Ireland

TENNON. n. f. [French.] The end of a timber cut to be fitted into another timber.
Such variety of parts, solid with hollow; some with cavities as mortises to receive, others with tenon to fit them. Ray

The tenon-jaw being thin, hath a back to keep it from bending. Moxon's Mech. Exercise
TENOUR. n. f. [tenor, Lat. tencur, Fr.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity;
general currency.
We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed. Sidney

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So fail'd the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity; a spring was there,
An everlasting spring, the jolly year
Led round in his great circle, no winds breath
As now did smell of Winter or of death. Crawford

Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the same, from woman to begin. Milton
Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men. Sprat

Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhymes.
Deduc'd from nature's birth to Caesar's times. Dryden

This success would look like chance if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor. Dryden
Can it be poison! poison's of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold. Dryden's Don Sebastian

'Tis here so great a uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preferred clearly points forth the month of May. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep. Pope

2. Sense contained; general course or drift.
Has not the divine Apollo said,
Is't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? Shakespeare Winter's Tale

By the stern brow and waspish action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor. Shakespeare As you like it

Bid me tear the bond.
—When it is paid according to the tenor. Shakespeare Reading it must be repeated again and again with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses. Locke

3. A found in music.
The first cutteth the air too sharp to make the found equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 173.

TENSE. adj. [tenus, Lat.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.
For the free passage of the found into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the found. Holder

TENSE. n. f. [temus, Fr. temus, Lat.]

[In grammar.] Tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time.
As foretells, when it is natural, answers to memory, so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs. Memory faith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; foretold, I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen. Gray

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are, speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen. Locke

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary. Watts

TENSENESS. n. f. [from tense.] Contradiction; tension: the contrary to laxity. Should

TEN

TEN

Should the pain and tenseness of the part continue, the operation must take place. Sharp's Surgery

TENSIBLE. adj. [tenibilis, Lat.] Capable of being extended.
Gold is the closest, and therefore the heaviest, of metals,
and is likewise the most flexible and tenible. Bacon

TENSILE. adj. [tenilis, Lat.] Capable of extension.
All bodies ductile and tenile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires, have in them the appetite of not discontinuing.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 845.

TENSION. n. f. [tenio, Fr. tenio, Lat.] The act of stretching; not laxation; the state of being stretched; not laxity.
It can have nothing of vocal found, voice being raised by suff tenio of the larynx; and on the contrary, this found by a relaxed posture of the muscles thereof. Holder

Still are the subtle strings in tenio found,
Like those of lutes, to just proportion wound,
Which of the air's vibration is the force. Blackmore

TENSIVE. adj. [tenius, Lat.] Giving a sensation of stiffness or contraction.
From choler is a hot burning pain; a beating pain from the pulse of the artery; a tensive pain from distention of the parts by the fulness of humours. Player on Humours

TENSURE. n. f. [tenus, Lat.] The act of stretching, or state of being stretched; the contrary to laxation or laxity.
This motion upon pressure, and the reciprocal thereof, motion upon tensure, we call action of liberty, which is,
when any body being forced to a preternatural extent, restoreth itself to the natural. Bacon

TENT. n. f. [tento, French; tentorium, Lat.]

1. A soldier's moveable lodging-place, commonly made of canvas extended upon poles.
The Turks, the more to terrify Corfu, taking a hill not far from it, covered the same with tents. Knellet

Because of the same craft he wrought with them; for by occupation they were tent makers. Acts xviii. 23.

2. Any temporary habitation; a pavilion.
He saw a spacious plain, whereon
Were tents of various hue; by some were herds
Of cattle grazing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

To Chalm's pleasing plains he took his way,
There pitched his tents, and there resolv'd to stay. Dryden

3. [Tente, French.] A roll of lint put into a fore.
Modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wife; the tent that searches
To th' bottom of the worst. Shak. Tril. and Cressida

A declining orifice keep open by a small tent dipt in some medicaments, and after digestion withdraw the tent and heal
it. Wise man's Surgery

4. [Vino tinto, Spanish.] A species of wine deeply red, chiefly from Galicia in Spain.

To TENT. v. n. [from the noun.] To lodge as in a tent; to tabernacle.

The smiles of knaves
Tent in my checks, and schoolboy's tears take up
The glances of my light. Shakespeare

To TENT. v. a. To search as with a medical tent.
I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blench,
I know my course. Shakespeare Hamlet

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart.
—Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare Coriolanus

Some surgeons, possibly against their own judgments, keep wounds tented, often to the ruin of their patient. Wise man

TENTATION. n. f. [tentatio, French; tentatio, Lat.] Trial; temptation.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole ten- tation, when he said ye shall not die, was in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Bacon's Vulgar Errors

TENTATIVE. adj. [tentative, effort, Fr. tents, Latin.] Trying; essaying.

TENTED. adj. [from tent.] Covered with tents.
These arms of mine till now have us'd
Their dearest action in the tented field. Shak. Othello

The foe deceiv'd, he pass'd the tented plain,
In Troy to mingle with the hostile train. Pope's Odyssey

TENTER. n. f. [tendo, tenus, Lat.]

1. A hook on which things are stretched.
2. To be on the tenter. To be on the stretch; to be in difficulties; to be in suspense.

In all my past adventures,
I never was set so on the tenter;
Or taken tardy with dilemma,
That e'er I way I turn does hem me. Hudibras, p. ii.

To TENTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To stretch by hooks.
A blown bladder prest rife again, and when leather or cloth is tentered, it springeth back. Bacon's N. Hist. N. 12.

To TENTER. v. n. To admit; extension.
Woollen cloth will tenter; linen scarcely. Bacon

TENTH. adj. [decima, Saxon.] First after the ninth; ordinal of ten.
It may be thought the less strange if others cannot do as much at the tenth or twentieth trial, as we did after much practice. Boyle

TEP

TENTH. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The tenth part.
Of all the horses,
The treasure in the field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth. Shakespeare Coriolanus

By decimation and a tithed death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shak.

To purchase but the tenth of all their store,
Would make the mighty Persian monarch poor. Dryden

Suppose half an ounce of silver now worth a bushel of wheat; but should there be next year a scarcity, five ounces of silver would purchase but one bushel: so that money would be then nine tenths less worth in respect of food. Locke

2. Tithes.
With cheerful heart
The tenth of thy increase bestow, and own Heav'n's bounteous goodness, that will sure repay
Thy grateful duty. Philips

3. Tenths are that yearly portion or tribute which all livings ecclesiastical yield to the king. The bishop of Rome pretended right to this revenue by example of the high priest of the Jews, who had tenths from the Levites, till by Henry the eighth they were annexed perpetually to the crown. Cowel

TENTHLY. adv. [from tenth.] In the tenth place.
TENTHINOUS. adj. [tentiginis, Lat.] Stiff; stretched.

TENTWORT. n. f. A plant. Ainsl.
TENUICULOUS. adj. [tenuis and culum, Lat.] Having thin leaves.

TENUITY. n. f. [tenuité, French; tenuitas, from tenuis, Lat.]
Thinness; exility; smallness; minuteness; not grossness.

Firs and pines mount of themselves in height without side boughs; partly heat, and partly tenuity of juice, sending the sap upwards. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 533.

The tenuity and contempt of clergymen will soon let them see what a poor carcass they are, when parted from the influence of that supremacy. King Charles

Consider the divers figurings of the brain; the livings or filaments thereof, their difference in tenuity, or apertures for motion. Grew's Anat. of the Brain

Aliment circulating through an animal body, is reduced to an almost imperceptible tenuity, before it can serve animal purposes. Arbutnot

At the height of four thousand miles the aether is of that wonderful tenuity, that if a small sphere of common air, of an inch diameter, should be expanded to the thinness of that aether, it would more than take up the orb of Saturn, which is many million times bigger than the earth. Bentley

TENUOUS. adj. [tenuis, Lat.] Thin; small; minute.
Another way of their attraction is by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, which after some distance retracteth unto itself. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. ii.

TENURE. n. f. [tenus, Lat. tenure, Fr. tenura, law Latin.]

Tenure is the manner whereby tenements are holden of their lords. In Scotland are four tenures; the first is pura cleimonia, which is proper to spiritual men, paying nothing for it, but devota animarum suffragia; the second they call feu, which holds of the king, church, barons, or others, paying a certain duty called feudi firma; the third is a holding in blanch by payment of a penny, rose, pair of gilt spurs, or some such thing, if asked; the fourth is by service of ward and relief, where the heir being minor is in the custody of his lord, together with his lands, &c. and land holden in this fourth manner is called feudum de hauberk or haubert, feudum militare or loricatorum. Tenure in grols is the tenure in capite; for the crown is called a feignory in grols, because a corporation of and by itself. Cowel

The service follows the tenure of lands; and the lands were given away by the kings of England to those lords. Spenser

The uncertainty of tenure, by which all worldly things are held, ministers very unpleasant meditation. Raleigh

Man must be known, his strength, his state,
And by that tenure he holds all of fate. Dryden

TEPEFACATION. n. f. [tepefacio, Latin.] The act of warming to a small degree.

TEPID. adj. [tepidus, Latin.] Lukewarm; warm in a small degree.

The tepid caves, and fens, and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch. Milton

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the dropping leaves, and dries the dew. Dryden

Such things as relax the skin are likewise sudorific; as warm water, friction, and tepid vapours. Arbutnot

TEPIDITY. n. f. [from tepid.] Lukewarmness. Ainsl.
TEPOR. n. f. [tepor, Lat.] Lukewarmness; gentle heat.

The small pox, mortal during such a season, grew more favourable by the tepor and moisture in April. Arbutnot

TO TEREBRATE. v. a. [terebro, Latin.] To bore; to perforate; to pierce.

Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's trifurcated, to burn, discuss, and terebate.

Earth-worms are completely adapted to their way of life, for terebating the earth, and creeping.

TEREBRATION. n. f. [from terebate.] The act of boring or piercing.

Terebation of trees makes them prosper better; and also it maketh the fruit sweeter and better.

TERGEMINOUS. adj. [tergeninus, Lat.] Threefold.

TERGIVERSATION. n. f. [tergum and verso, Lat.]

1. Shift; subterfuge; evasion.

Writing is to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being free from passions and tergiversations.

2. Change; fieldness.

The colonel, after all his tergiversations, lost his life in the king's service.

TERM. n. f. [terminus, Latin.]

1. Limit; boundary.

Corruption is a reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two terms or boundaries, and the guides to life and death.

2. [Terme, Fr.] The word by which a thing is expressed. A word of art.

To apply notions philosophical to plebeian terms, or to say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, be but shifts of ignorance.

Those parts of nature into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names, which we have expressed in their plain and proper terms.

In painting, the greatest beauties cannot always be expressed for want of terms.

Had the Roman tongue continued vulgar, it would have been necessary, from the many terms of art required in trade and in war, to have made great additions to it.

3. Words; language.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrakes groan, I would invent as bitter searching terms,

As curst, as harsh, as horrible to hear.

God to Satan first his doom apply'd,

Though in mysterious terms.

4. Condition; stipulation.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir?

Enjoy thy love, since such is thy desire,

Live though unhappy, live on any terms.

Did religion before heaven without any terms or conditions, indifferently upon all, there would be no infidel.

We flattered ourselves with reducing France to our own terms by the want of money, but have been still disappointed by the great sums imported from America.

5. [Termino, old French.] Time for which any thing lasts; a limited time.

I am thy father's spirit,

Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?

No; let us draw her term of freedom out

In its full length, and spin it to the last.

6. [In law.] The time in which the tribunals, or places of judgment, are open to all that list to complain of wrong, or to seek their right by course of law or action; the rest of the year is called vacation. Of these terms there are four in every year, during which matters of justice are discussed: one is called Hilary term, which begins the twenty-third of January, or, if that be Sunday, the next day following, and ends the twenty-first of February; another is called Easter term, which begins eighteen days after Easter, and ends the Monday next after Ascension-day; the third is Trinity term, beginning the Friday next after Trinity Sunday, and ending the Wednesday-forenoon after; the fourth is Michaelmas term, beginning the sixth of November, or, if that be Sunday, the next day after, and ending the twenty-eighth of November.

The term suiters may speed their business: for the end of these sessions delivereth them space enough to overtake the beginning of the terms.

Too long vacation hasten'd on his term.

Those men employed as justices daily in term time consult with one another.

What are these to those vast heaps of crimes

Which terms prolong.

TO TERM. v. a. [from the noun.] To name; to call.

Men term what is beyond the limits of the universe imaginary space, as if no body existed in it.

TERMAGANCY. n. f. [from termagant.] Turbulence; tumultuousness.

Bodies that are solid, separable, terminated and moveable, have all sorts of figures.

2. To put an end to: as, to terminate any difference.

TO TERMINATE. v. n. To be limited; to end; to have an end; to attain its end.

That God was the maker of this visible world was evident from the very order of causes; the greatest argument by which natural reason evinces a God; it being necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to, and terminate in, some first; which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things, but itself be caused by none.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven.

Ere I the rapture of my wish renew,

I tell you then, it terminates in you.

TERMINATION. n. f. [from terminare.]

1. The act of limiting or bounding.

2. Bound; limit.

Its earthly and salinuous parts are so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discreted by atomical terminations.

3. End; conclusion.

4. [In grammar; terminatio, Latin; terminalion, Fr.] End of words as varied by their significations.

Those rude heaps of words and terminations of an unknown tongue, would have never been so happily learnt by heart without some smoothing artifice.

5. Word; term. Not in use.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs; if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the North star.

TERMINUS. n. f. [terminus, Latin.] A tumour.

Terminus is of a blackish colour; it breaks, and within a day the pustule comes away in a scab.

TERMLESS. adj. [from term.] Unlimited; boundless.

These betraying lights look not up towards termless joys, nor down towards endless sorrows.

TERRACE. n. f. [terrace, French; terracia, Italian.] A small mount of earth covered with grass.

He made her gardens not only within the palace, but upon terraces raised with earth over the arched roofs, planted with all sorts of fruits.

Fear broke my slumbers, I no longer stay,

But mount the terrace, thence the town survey.

TO TERRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

Of huge extent sometimes, with brazen eyes

And hairy mane terrific.

The British navy through ocean vast Shall wave her double cross, 't' extreme climes

Terrific.

TERRAQUEOUS. adj. [terra and aqua, Latin.] Composed of land and water.

TER

The terracqueous globe is, to this day, nearly in the same condition that the universal deluge left it.

TERRENE. adj. [terrenus, Lat.] Earthly; terrestrial.

They think that the same rules of decency which serve for things done unto terrene powers, should universally decide what is fit in the service of God.

Our terrene moon is now eclips'd.

And it portends alone the fall of Antony.

God set before him a mortal and immortal life, a nature celestial and terrene; but God gave man to himself.

Over many a tract

Of heav'n they march'd, and many a province wide,

Tenfold the length of this terrene.

TERRE-BLUE. n. f. [terre and bleu, Fr.] A sort of earth.

Terre-blue is a light, loose, friable kind of lapis armenus.

TERRE-VERTE. n. f. [French.] A sort of earth.

Terre-verte owes its colour to a slight admixture of copper.

Terre-verte, or green earth, is light; it is a mean betwixt yellow ochre and ultramarine.

TERREOUS. adj. [terreus, Lat.] Earthy; consisting of earth.

There is but little similitude betwixt a terreous humidity and plantal germinations.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, variously begin intumescencies.

TERRESTRIAL. adj. [terrestris, Lat.]

1. Earthly; not celestial.

Far passing th' height of men terrestrial,

Like a huge giant of the Titan race.

Terrestrial heav'n! danc'd round by other heav'ns

That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps,

Light above light.

Thou brought'st Briareus with his hundred hands,

So call'd in heav'n; but mortal men below

By his terrestrial name Egeon know.

2. Consisting of earth's terreous. Improper.

I did not confine these observations to land or terrestrial parts of the globe, but extended them to the fluids.

TO TERRESTRIAL. v. a. [terrestris and facio, Latin.] To reduce to the state of earth.

Though we should affirm, that heaven were but earth celestialized, and earth but heaven terrestrialized; or, that each part above had an influence on its divided affinity below; yet to single out these relations is a work to be effected by revelation.

TERRESTRIOUS. adj. [terrestris, Lat. terrestris, Fr.] Terrestrial; earthy; consisting of earth.

This variation proceedeth from terrestrious eminences of earth respecting the needle.

TERRIBLE. adj. [terribilis, Fr. from terribilis, Lat.]

1. Dreadful; formidable; causing fear.

In the most terrible and nimble stroke

Of quick, cross lightning.

Not terrible, though terror be in love.

Thy native Latium was thy darling care,

Prudent in peace, and terrible in war.

2. Great so as to offend: a colloquial hyperbole.

Being indispos'd by the terrible coldness of the season, he reported himself till the weather should mend.

I began to be in a terrible fear of him, and to look upon myself as a dead man.

TERRIBLENESS. n. f. [from terrible.] Formidableness; the quality of being terrible: dreadfulness.

Having quite lost the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness.

7. It seems to signify any vessel that holds fire.
Your noble race
We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True, but ere they come,
You toss your ceiling test, and fume the room.
TESTACEOUS. adj. [testaceus, Lat. testaceus, Fr.]
1. Consisting of shells; composed of shells.
2. Having continuous; not jointed shells; opposed to crustaceous.
Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose strong and thick shells are entire, and of a piece;
because those which are jointed, as the lobsters, are crustaceous: but in medicine all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called.
Several shells were found upon the shores, of the crustaceous and testaceous kind.
The mineral particles in these shells is plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell.

groins and testicles.
TESTIFICATION. n. s. [testificatio, Lat. from testify.] The act of witnessing.
When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible testification of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united.
In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testification of our homage to God.
TESTIFICATOR. n. s. [testificator, Latin.] One who witnesses.
TESTIFIER. n. s. [testifier, Latin.] One who testifies.
To TESTIFY. v. n. [testifico, Lat.] To witness; to prove;

send them out with passports and testimonials, and will have them pass for legitimate.
It is possible to have such testimonials of divine authority as may be sufficient to convince the more reasonable part of mankind, and pray what is wanting in the testimonies of Jesus Christ?
A clerk does not exhibit to the bishop letters, mislive or testimonial, testifying his good behaviour.
TESTIMONY. n. s. [testimonium, Latin.]
1. Evidence given; proof.
The proof of every thing must be by the testimony of such as the parties produce.
If I bring you sufficient testimony, my ten thousand ducats are mine.
I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband.
I must bear this testimony to Otway's memory, that the passions are truly touched in his Venice Preserved.
2. Public evidences.
By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd,
An ark and in the ark his testimony;
The records of his covenant.

THA

if the first authors might speak for themselves, would appear a thankless office.

Wage still their wails,
And bring home on thy breast more thankless scars. Cowley.

THANKLESSNESS. n. f. [from thankless.] Ingratitude; failure to acknowledge good received.

Not t' have written then, seems little less Than worst of civil vices. Thankless. Domie.

THANKOFFERING. n. f. [from thank and offering.] Offering paid in acknowledgment of mercy.

A thousand thank-offerings are due to that providence which has delivered our nation from these absurd iniquities. Watts.

THANKSGIVING. n. f. [from thank and give.] Celebration of mercy.

These sacred hymns Christianity hath peculiar to itself, the other being songs too of praise and thanksgiving, wherewith as we serve God so the Jews likewise. Hosier, b. v. tude; meritorious.

Of old there were songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God. Neb. xii. 46.

We should acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praises and thanksgivings.

THANKSWORTHY. adj. [from thank and worthy.] Deserving gratitude. 1. f. ii. 19.

If love be compell'd, and cannot chide,
How can it gratefully, or thank-worthily prove? Deviser.

THARN. n. f. [Saxony, Saxon; darn, Dutch, the gut.] Intestines twisted for several uses.

THAT, pronoun. [that, Gothick; that, Saxon; dat, Dutch.] 1. Not this, but the other.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren. 1. Cor. vi. 8.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies I will not cast them away. Lev. xxvii. 44.

They weep as if they meant
That way at least proud Nabas to prevent. Cowley.

This runick subject will occur upon that of poetry. Temple.

What is inviting in this sort of poetry proceeds not so much from the idea of a country life itself, as from that of its tranquillity. Pope.

5. Opposed to this as the other to one.

This is not fair; nor profitable that;
Nor rather question proper for debate. Dryden's Persius.

In this scale gold, in that same does lie,
The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or ecce to the latter, and that like ille or ecce to the former.

Such as
By religion is meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason, and to live as becomes those who believe a God and a future state. Tilleyson.

8. That which; what.

Sir, I think the meat wants that I have.
Basting. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors.

10. The thing which then was.

Secure proud Nabas slept,
And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barb'rous rout. Cowley.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,
That Jonathan in whom does mixt remain
All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days. Cowley.

12. In THAT. As being.

Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are published. Hosier, b. v.

THAT, conjunction.

1. Because.

It is not that I love you less Than when before your feet I lay;
But to prevent the sad increase
Of hopeless love, I keep away. Waller.

THE

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong. Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace,
Is fool or coward writ upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far induce the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it to agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may
With at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH. n. f. [Saxony, Saxon; thatch, Skimmer, from thac, a roof, in Islandick thak. Mr. Lye.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a fye, beneath a roof of thatch
Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch, Cud, whiting, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaice. Swift.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch. Snape.

To THATCH. v. a. [Saxony, Saxon.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hair, and thatch. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 537.

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead. Shakespeare.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. ed.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold
The palace thatched with straw. Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house above two stories;
A lyric ode would state, a catch
Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

On the cottage thatched, or lordly roof Keen fallowing. Thomson.

THATCHER. n. f. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;
Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, bailiff,
Ash is universal timber; it serves the soldier, seamen, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman. Swift.

To THAW. v. n. [Saxony, Saxon; legen, Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
His letter at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou begin'st to thaw for this,
May my name step in. Domie.

It on firm land
Thaw's not but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice. Milton.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Pierius's fire scarce thaws the ficles. Shakespeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools. Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakespeare.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Her icy heart is thaw'd. Granville.

THAW. n. f. [from the verb.] Liquefaction of any thing congealed; warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and diller than a great thaw. Shakespeare, Much ado about nothing.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

Hardens his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rains. Dryden.

First the tender blade peeps.
THAW, article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debts.
He only liv'd but till he was a man.
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

THE

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bad chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon, b. viii.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the mutes Hannibal.
The fair example of the heavy lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world,
Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' special engines bent to rear
His fortunes up unto the state they were,
Th' adorning this with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill,
'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes th' is cut off.

In this scale word, in th' other gold does lie. Cowley.

4. In the following passage th' is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

THEATRICAL. adj. [theatre, Fr. theatrical, Lat.] Belonging to a theatre.

1. A place in which shows are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wife and universal theatre,
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakespeare, As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of statelike view. Milton.

In the midst of this fair valley stood
A native theatre, which rising flow'd
By just degrees of ascent to the ground below. Dryden.

THEATRICAL. n. f. [theatrum, Latin.] Scenic; suiting a theatre.

THEATRICAL. n. f. theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms fickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart. Decay of Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrical state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEATRICALY. adv. [from theatrical.] In a manner suiting the stage.

Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud. Swift's Miscel.

Poor and faint, to the alone were giv'n
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

THEFT. n. f. [from theft.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowley.

His thefts were too open, his filching was like an unskillful finger, he kept not time. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Their nurse Euripile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shakespeare.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exod. xxii. 4.

THEFT. n. f. [Saxony, of them, Saxon.] Of them; the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shakespeare.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio. Dryden.

2. There is used when any thing comes between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow, and they never in theirs to refuse. Hosier, b. v.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears,
'Tis our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares,
The fault is more their languages than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And reading with, like theirs, our fate and fame. Pope.

THE

THEM, the oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. f. [theme, Fr. from thema.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. f. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons.

Whatever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hosier, b. v.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that whole journey. Clarendon.

These, then a boy, with my arms I laid. Dryden.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 437.

3. In that case; in consequence.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now thaws with level wing the deep, then toars. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estr.

6. That time; it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Milton.

THENCE. n. f. [contracted, according to Minfretu, from thence hence.]

1. From that place.

Faith by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid. Milton.

Surat he took, and thence preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came. Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days. Isa. lxx.

3. For that reason.

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him. Milton's Agonist.

4. From thence is a barbarous expression, thence implying the same.

From thence; from him, whose daughter His tears proclaim'd his parting with her; thence
We have cross'd. Shakespeare.

There plant eyes, all must from thence Purge and disperse. Milton.

THENCEFORTH. adv. [thence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made To ambitious Rome. Spenser.

They shall be placed in Leinster, and have land given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour thenceforth for their living. Spenser, on Ireland.

2. From thenceforth is a barbarous corruption crept into later books.

THE

His holy eyes; relishing from themselves
To leave them to their own polluted ways.
Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed; but whosoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before, and which from thenceforth he never questions. Lake.

THENCEFORWARD. adv. [thence and forward.] On from that time.

THI

- THE'SIS. n. f. [thesis, Fr. thesis.] A position; something laid down; affirmatively or negatively.
- The truth of what you here lay down,
By some example should be shown.
An honest, but a simple pair,
May serve to make this thesis clear. Prior.
- THE'SMOTHE. n. f. [thesmote, Fr. thesmote; thesmote and thesmote.] A lawgiver.
- THE'URGY. n. f. [thesurgy.] The power of doing supernatural things by lawful means, as by prayer to God. Bailey.
- THEW. n. f. [thaw, Saxon.]
1. Quality; manners; customs; habit of life; form of behaviour.
Home report these happy news,
For well-ye worthy been for worth and gentle thews.
From mother's pap I taken was unfit,
And freight deliver'd to a fairy knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thews and martial might. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify brawn, or bulk, from the Saxon thow, the thigh, or some such meaning.
Nature crescent does not grow alone
In theus and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to chuse a man?
Care I for the limbs, the theus, the stature, bulk and big semblance of a man? give me the spirit, master Shallow.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- THE'WED. adj. [from thaw.] Educated; habituated; accustomed.
- But he was wife and wary of her will,
And ever held his hand upon his heart;
Yet would not seem so rude, and thawed in ill,
As to despise so courteous seeming part. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- THEY. n. f. in the oblique case them, the plural of he or she. [thay, Saxon.]
1. The men; the women; the persons.
They are in a most warlike preparation. Shak. Coriolanus.
Why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The Spaniard
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble.
They eat on beds of silk and gold,
At ivory tables, or wood fold Dearer than it. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.
They know Prior.
 2. To joy the friend and grapple with the foe.
Those men; those women; opposed to some others.
Only they,
That come to hear a merry play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most who have the least to say.
It is used indefinitely; as the French on dit.
There, as they say, perpetual night is found In silence brooding on th' unhappy ground. Dryden.
- TH'BLE. n. f. A slice; a cummer; a spatula.
- THICK. adj. [thice, Saxon; dick, Dutch; dyck, Danish; thickur, Islandick.]
1. Not thin.
 2. Dense; not rare; gross; crass.
God caused the wind to blow, to dry up the abundant slime of the earth, make the land more firm, and cleanse the air of thick vapours and unwholesome mists. Raleigh.
To warm milk pour spirit of nitre; the milk presently after will become thicker than it was. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. Not clear; not transparent; muddy; feculent.
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,
And given my treasures and my rights of thee,
To thick ey'd musing and curs'd melancholy?
A fermentation makes all the wine in the vessel thick or foul; but when that is past, it grows clear of itself. Temple.
Encumber'd in the mud, their oars divide
With heavy strokes the thick unwieldy tide. Addison.
 4. Great in circumference; not slender.
My little finger shall be thicker than his loins. 1 Kings xii.
Thou art waxen fat; thou art grown thick, covered with fatness. Deut. xxxii. 15.
 5. Frequent; in quick succession; with little intermission.
They charged the defendants with their small shot and Turky arrows as thick as hail. Kneller.
Favours came thick upon him, like main flowers than sprinkling drops or dews; for the next St. George's day he was knighted, made gentleman of the king's bed-chamber, and an annual pension given him. Wotton.
This being once a week, came too thick and too often about. Spelman.

THI

- His pills as thick as handgranado's flew,
And where they fell as certainly they flew. Rescommen.
- Clofe; not divided by much space; crowded.
It brought them to a hollow cave,
Amid the thickest woods. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The people were gathered thick together. Luke xi. 29.
Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main,
Nor thicker harvests on rich Hermus rise,
Than stand these troops. Dryden's En.
He fought secure of fortune as of fame;
Still by new means the island might be shewn;
Conquests he strew'd where'er he came,
Thick as the galaxy with stars is sown. Dryden.
Objects of pain or pleasure do not lie thick enough together in life to keep the soul in constant action. Addison.
7. Not easily pervious; set with things close to each other.
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light.
The speedy horse
Watch each entrance of the winding wood,
Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.
Next the proud palace of Salerno stood
A mount of rough ascent, and thick with wood. Dryden.
Bring it near some thick-headed tree. Mortimer.
 8. Coarse; not thin.
It tasteth a little of the wax, which in a pomegranate, or some such thick-coated fruit, it would not. Bacon.
Thick-leaved weeds amongst the grass will need more drying than ordinary grass. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 9. Without proper intervals of articulation.
Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Became the accents of the valiant,
To seem like him. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- THICK. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. The thickest part or time when any thing is thickest.
Achimenes having with a mine suddenly blown up a great part of the wall of the Spanish station, in the thick of the dust and smoke presently entered his men. Kneller.
 2. Thick and thin. Whatever is in the way.
Through perils both of wind and limb,
Through thick and thin she followed him. Hudibras.
When first the down appears upon his chin,
For a small sum to swear through thick and thin. Dryden.
- THICK. adv. [It is not always easy to distinguish the adverb from the adjective.]
1. Frequently; fast.
'Tis some disaster,
Or else he would not fend so thick. Denham's Sephy.
I hear the trampling of thick beating feet;
This way they move. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 2. Closely.
The neighbour plain with arms is cover'd o'er;
The vale an iron harvest seems to yield,
Of thick sprung lances in a waving field. Dryden.
A little plat of ground thick sown, is better than a great field which lies fallow. Norris's Mytel.
 3. To a great depth.
If you apply it thick spread, it will eat to the bone. Wifem.
Cato has piercing eyes, and will discern
Our frauds, unless they're cover'd thick with art. Addison.
 4. Thick and threefold. In quick succession; in great numbers.
They came thick and threefold for a time, till one experienced fager discovered the plot. L'Estrange's Feb.
- To THICKEN. v. a. [from thick.]
1. To make thick.
 2. To make close; to fill up interstices.
Waters evaporated and mounted up into the air, thicken and cool it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 3. To condense; to concretize.
The white of an egg gradually dissolves by heat, exceeding a little the heat of a human body; a greater degree of heat will thicken it into a white, dark-coloured, dry, viscous mass. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 4. To strengthen; to confirm.
'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream;
And this may help to thicken other proofs, Shakespeare's Othello.
That do demonstrate thinly.
 5. To make frequent.
 6. To make close or numerous.
- To THICKEN. v. n.
1. To grow thick.
 2. To grow dense or muddy.
Thy lustre thickens
When he shines by. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
 3. To concretize; to be consolidated.
Water stop gives birth
To grass and plants, and thickens into earth. Prior.
 4. To grow close or numerous.
The press of people thickens to the court,
Th' impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryden.
He saw the crowd thicken, and desired to know how many there were. Tatler.

THI

5. To grow quick.
The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward when the show'ry kids arise,
Or parting hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Addison.
- THICKET. n. f. [thicket, Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.
- I drew you hither,
Into the thickest thicket of the park. Shakespeare.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.
Thus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh.
- How often, from the steep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator?
My brothers slept to the next thicket-side
To bring me berries. Milton.
- Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mis'd, but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the speed. Dryden.
- I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Addison's Cato.
- THICKLY. adv. [from thick.] Deeply; to a great quantity.
Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.
- THICKNESS. n. f. [from thick.]
1. The state of being thick; density.
 2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.
In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.
 3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.
Poll a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay on the top, and see what it will put forth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 4. Confistence; grossness; not rareness; spissitude.
Nitre mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and anointed on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 444.
Discales imagined to come from the thickness of blood, come often from the contrary cause. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 5. Imperviousness; closeness.
The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.
 6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.
A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect. Holder.
What you write is printed in large letters; otherwise between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.
- THICK-SCULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.
Pleas'd to hear their thick-sull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said!
This downright fighting fool, this thick-sull'd hero,
This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryden.
- THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.
His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thicket thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected, like a field of spears. Dryden.
The world is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Grew.
- THICKSKIN. n. f. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskul.
- The shallowest thickskin of that barren fort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene and enter'd in a brake. Shakespeare.
- THIEF. n. f. [thief, Gothick; thief, Saxon; thief, Dutch.
It was anciently written thief, and so appeareth to have been of two syllables; thie was wont to be taken for thrift, so that thie of is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives.]
1. One who takes what belongs to another: the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber by violence; but these senses are confounded.
- Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night.
Shakespeare.
This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag. John.
Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?

THI

- Am I obliged by that t' assist his rapines, Dryden.
And to maintain his murders?
2. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle.
Their burning lamps the storm ensuing show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow. May.
- THIEF-CATCHER. } [thief and catch.] } One whose bu-THIEF-LEADER. } [thief and lead.] } siness is to de-THIEF-TAKER. } [thief and take.] } tect thieves, and bring them to justice.
- A wolf passed by as the thief-leader were dragging a fox to execution. L'Estrange.
- My ev'nings all I would with sharpers spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend. Bramston.
- To THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal; to practise theft.
- THIEVERY. n. f. [from thieve.]
1. The practice of stealing.
Ne how to scape great punishment and shame, Spenser.
For their false treason and vile thievery.
Master, be one of them; 'tis an honourable kind of thievery. Shakespeare.
Do villainy, do; since you profess to do't.
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery. Shakespeare.
He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. ii.
 2. That which is stolen.
Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.
Injurious time now, with a robber's hafts,
Crams his rich thievery up he knows not how. Shakespeare.
- THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]
1. Given to stealing; practising theft.
What, would'st thou have me go and beg my food?
Or with a bare and boist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road. Shakespeare.
O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars;
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller?
The thievish God suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spoke;
Discover not the theft. Addison.
 2. Secret; sly.
Four and twenty times the pilot's glass Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass. Shakespeare.
- THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.] Like a thief.
They lay not to live by their work;
But thievishly loiter and lurk. Tusser's Husb.
- THIEVISHNESS. n. f. [from thievish.] Disposition to steal;
habit of stealing.
- THIGH. n. f. [thigh, Saxon; thieo, Islandick; die, Dutch.]
The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee.
The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body:
its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its fore-side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its back-side. Quincy.
He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Gen. xxxii. 25.
The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh bone bare. Wifem.
- THILL. pronoun. [thill, Saxon.] That same. Obsolete.
- I love thill lass: alas, why do I love!
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn. Spenser's Past.
- THILL. n. f. [thill, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon; the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.
More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Mortimer's Husb.
- THILL-HORSE. } [thill and horse.] } The last horse; the THILLER. } horse that goes between the shafts.
- Whole bridle and fiddle, whither and na, Tusser.
With collars and harness for thiller and al.
What a beard hast thou got? thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shak.
- THIMBLE. n. f. [This is supposed by Minhew to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.
Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare's King John.
Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras, p. i.
Veins that run perpendicular to the horizon, have valves jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself if that were thrift, I wish none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney, b. ii.

 You some permit
 To second ill with ill, each worse than other,
 And make them dreaded to the doer's thrift. Shakespeare.
 Had I but the means
 To hold a rival place with one of them,
 I have a mind prefages me such thrift,
 That I should be fortunate. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
 Should the poor be flatter'd?
 No; let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp,
 And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
 Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 2. Parsimony; frugality; good husbandry.
 The rest unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrift, prove very good husbands. Spenser on Ireland.
 Out of the present sparing and untimely thrift, there grow many future inconveniences and continual charge in repairing and re-edifying such imperfect flight-built vessels. Raleigh.
 Thus heaven, though all-sufficient, shows a thrift
 In his economy, and bounds his gift. Dryden.
 3. A plant.
 The thrift is a plant with a flower gathered into an almost spherical head, furnished with a common scaly empalement:
 this head is composed of several clove-gillflower flowers, consisting of several leaves in a proper empalement, shaped like a funnel; in like manner the pointal rises out of the same empalement, and afterwards turns to an oblong seed, wrapt up in the empalement, as in an hulk. Miller.

THRIFTY, adj. [from thrift.]

1. Frugal; sparing; not profuse; not lavish.
Though some men do, as do they would,
Let thrifty do, as do they should. Tusser.

Nature never lends
The finallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thrifty goddess she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
Thanks and use. Shakespeare.

Left he should neglect his studies
Like a young heir, the thrifty goddess,
For fear young master should be spoilt,
Would use him like a younger child. Swift.
I am glad he has so much youth and vigour left, of which he hath not been thrifty; but wonder he has no more discretion. Swift.

2. Well-husbanded.
I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I fav'd under your father. Shakespeare.
To THRILL, v. a. [from thrill, Saxon; drilla, Swedish.] To pierce; to bore; to penetrate; to drill.

The cruel word her tender heart to thrill'd,
That sudden cold did run through every vein,
And formy horror all her senses fill'd
With dying fit, that down she fell for pain. Fairy Qu.
He pierced through his chafed chest
With thrilling point of deadly iron brand,
And lanc'd his lordly heart. Fairy Qu. b. i.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act; bending his sword
To his great master. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Nature, that heard such found,
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's feat, the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won,
To think her part was done. Milton.

To THRILL, v. n.

1. To have the quality of piercing.
The knight his thrilling spear again assay'd,
In his brail-plated body to embold. Fairy Qu. b. i.
With that, one of his thrilling darts he threw,
Headed with ire and vengeable despite. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
2. To pierce or wound the ear with a sharp sound.
The piteous maiden, careful, comfortless,
Does throw out thrilling shrieks, and shrieking cries. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. To feel a sharp tingling sensation.
To seek sweet safety out,
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake,
Ev'n at the crying of our nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman. Shakespeare.
Art thou not horribly afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it? Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. i.
4. To pass with a tingling sensation.
A faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakespeare.
A sudden horror chill
Ran through each nerve, and thrill'd in ev'ry vein. Addison.

To THRIVE, v. n. pret. thrive, and sometimes less properly thrived, part. thriven. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory etymology: in the northern dialect they use thridden, to make grow; perhaps thrive was the original word, from thras, liandick, to increase.] To prosper; to grow rich; to advance in any thing desired.

He came forth with his clowns horst on poor cart-jades, and so furnished, that if this be thrift, I with my subjects never thrive. Sidney.
The better thou thrive'st, the gladder am I. Tusser.
If lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us. Shakespeare.
It grew amongst bushes, where commonly plants do not thrive. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 620.

They by vices thrive,
Sail on smooth seas, and at their port arrive. Sandys.
O son! why fit we here, each other viewing
Idly, while Satan, our great author, thrives
In other worlds, and happier seat provides For us, his offspring dear? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Those who have revelled upon the thriving sort of piety, seldom embark all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.
A careful shepherd not only turns his flock into a common pasture, but with particular advenience observes the thriving of every one. Decay of Piety.

Growth is of the very nature of some things: to be and to thrive is all one with them; and they know no middle season between their spring and their fall. South's Serm.
Experience'd age in deep despair was lost,
To see the rebel thrive, the loyal crost. Dryden.
Seldom a thriving man turns his land into money to make the greater advantage. Locke.

THR

The thriven calves in meads their food forsake,
And render their sweet souls before the plenteous rack. Dryden's Virgil.

A little hope—but I have none.
On air the poor camellions thrive,
Deny'd ev'n that my love can live. Granville.
Such a care hath always been taken of the city charities, that they have thriven and prospered gradually from their infancy, down to this very day. Atterbury's sermon.

In the fat age of pleasure, wealth and ease,
Sprung the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

Diligence and humility is the way to thrive in the riches of the understanding, as well as in gold. Watts's Logic.
THRIVER, n. s. [from thrive.] One that prospers; one that grows rich.

He had so well improved that little stock his father left, as he was like to prove a thriver in the end. Hayward.
THRIVINGLY, adv. [from thriving.] In a prosperous way.
THRO', contracted by barbarians from through.

What thanks can wretched fugitives return,
Who scatter'd thru' the world in exile mourn. Dryden.

THROAT, n. s. [from throat, Saxon.]

1. The forepart of the neck; the passages of nutriment and breath.
The gold, I give thee, will I melt and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakespeare.
Wherefore could I not pronounce, amen?
I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. The main road of any place.
Her honour, and her courage try'd,
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.
3. To cut the THROAT. To murder; to kill by violence.
These bred up amongst the Englishmen, when they become kern, are made more fit to cut their throats. Spenser.
A trumpet that was made prisoner, when the soldiers were about to cut his throat, says, why should you kill a man that kills nobody? L'Estrange.

THROATPIPE, n. s. [throat and pipe.] The wealon; the windpipe.
THROATWORT, n. s. [throat and wort.] A plant.
The throatwort hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, and cut into several parts at the top, whose emplacement becomes a membranaceous fruit, often triangular, and divided into three cells, full of small seeds. Miller.

To THROB, v. n. [from Seputis, Minerva and Junius; formed in imitation of the sound, Skinner; perhaps contracted from throw up.]
1. To heave; to beat; to rise as the breast with sorrow or distress.
Here may his head live on my throbbing breast. Shakespeare.
My heart throbs to know one thing: Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Shall Banquo's issue ever reign?
'Twas the clash of swords; my troubled heart
Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and akes at every found. Addison.
How that warm'd me! How my throbbing heart
Leapt to the image of my father's joy,
When you shou'd strain me in your folding arms. Smith.

2. To beat; to palpitate.
In the depending orifice there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism, the blood being choked in by the constricted flesh. Wise's Surgery.
THROB, n. s. [from the verb.] Heave; beat; stroke of palpitation.
She sigh'd from bottom of her wounded breast,
And after many bitter throbs did throw,
With lips full pale, and fainting tongue oppress'd. Fa. Qu.
Thou talk'st like one who never felt
Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul,
That pants and reaches after distant good. Addison's Cato.

THROE, n. s. [from thronian, to suffer, Saxon.]
1. The pain of travail; the anguish of bringing children: it is likewise written thruo.
Lucina lent not me her bed,
But took me in my throes. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
My womb pregnant, and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt and useful throes. Milton.
Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pains,
My throes come thicker and my cries increase'd. Dryden.
Reflect on that day, when earth shall be again in travail with her sons, and at one fruitful throe bring forth all the generations of learned and unlearned, noble and ignoble dust. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Any extreme agony; the final and mortal struggle.
O man! have mind of that most bitter throe,
For as the tree does fall so lies it ever low. Fairy Qu.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses, Their

THR

Their pangs of love, with other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will do
Some kindness to them. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

To THROE, v. a. [from the noun.] To put in agonies.
The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim a birth,
Which throes thee much to yield. Shakespeare. Tem. 4th.

THRONE, n. s. [thronus, Lat. thrōnē.]
1. A royal seat; the seat of a king.
Boundless intemperance hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And full of many kings. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Th' eternal father from his throne beheld
Their multitude. Milton.
Stonchenge once thought a temple, you have found
A throne where kings were crown'd. Dryden.

2. The seat of a bishop.
In those times the bishops preached on the steps of the altar standing, having not as yet assumed the state of a throne.
Thro', contracted by barbarians from through. Ascham's Parergon.

To THRONE, v. a. [from the noun.] To en throne; to set on a royal seat.
They have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Thron'd and set high! Shakespeare.
True image of the father, whether thron'd
In the bosom of bliss and light of light,
Conceiving or remote from heav'n, enshrind
In fastly tabernacle and human form. Milton.

O prince! O chief of many throned powers.
Thron'd in glass and nam'd it Caroline. Pope.
THRONO, n. s. [from thronos, Saxon, from thronjan, to press.] A croud; a multitude pressing against each other.

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives:
We are now yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throgs. Shakespeare.
A throng
Of thick short fobs in thund'ring volleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs. Crazeau.
This book, the image of his mind,
Will make his name not hard to find.
I with the throng of great and good Made it less easily understood. Waller.

With studious thought observ'd th' illustrious throng,
In nature's order as they pass'd along;
Their names, their faces. Dryden's Æn.
To THRONO, v. n. [from the noun.] To croud; to come in tumultuous multitudes.

I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
His mother could not longer bear the agitations of so many passions as throng'd upon her, but fell upon his neck, crying out, my son. Tatler, N. 55.

To THRONO, v. a. To oppress or incommode with crowds or tumults.
I'll say, thou hast gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly. Shakespeare.
The multitude throng thee and press thee. Luke viii. 45.
All access was throng'd, the gates Thick swarm'd. Milton.

THROSTLE, n. s. [from throste, Saxon.] The thrush; a small singing bird.
The throistle with his note so true,
The wren with little quill. Shakespeare.
The black-bird and throsted with their melodious voices bid welcome to the cheerful spring. Waller's Angler.

THROSTLE, n. s. [from throste.] The windpipe.
At the upper extreme it hath no larynx or throste to quality the found. Erasmus's Vulgar Errors.
To THROSTLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To choke; to suf-focate; to kill by stopping the breath.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throste their practis'd accents in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off. Shakespeare.
As when Antreas in Italia strove
With Jove's Alcides, and off foild'd still rofe, Receiving from his mother earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throsted at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.

His throat half throsted with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam. Dryden.
The throting quintey 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I lend to rack the joints. Dryden.
Throste thyself with an ell of strong tape,
For thou hast not a groat to atone for a rape. Swift.

THROVE, the pretence of thrive.
England never throve so well, nor was there ever brought into England so great an increase of wealth since. Locke.
THROUGH, prep. [from thru, Saxon; deur, Dutch; durch, German.]

1. From end to end of.
He hath been so successful with common heads, that he hath led their belief through all the works of nature. Bretun.

Fame of th' asserted sea through Europe blown,
Made France and Spain ambitious of his love. Dryden.

2. Noting passage.
Through the gate of iv'ry he dismiss'd
His valiant offspring. Dryden's Æn.
The same thing happened when I removed the prism out of the sun's light, and looking through it upon the hole shining by the light of the clouds beyond it. Newton.

3. By transposition.
Through these hands this science has passed with great applause. Temple.
Material things are presented only through their senses;
they have a real influx on these, and all real knowledge of material things is conveyed into the understanding through these senses. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

4. By means of.
The strong through pleasure soonest falls, the weak through sloth. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Something you may deserve of him through me. Shak.

idleness of the hands the house droppeth through. Ecclesi. x.
You will not make this a general rule to debar such from preaching the gospel, as have through infirmity fallen. Whitgift.
Some through ambition, or through thirst of gold,
Have slain their brothers, and their country fold. Dryden.
To him, to him, 'tis giv'n
Passion, and care, and anguish to destroy:
Through him soft peace and plenitude of joy
Perpetual o'er the world redeem'd shall flow. Prior.

THROUGH, adv.
1. From one end or side to the other.
You'd be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through. Shakespeare.
Inquire how metal may be tinged through and through, and with what, and into what colours? Bacon.
Pointed satire runs him through and through. Oldham.
To understand the mind of him that writ, is to read the whole letter through, from one end to the other. Locke.

2. To the end of any thing.
Every man brings such a degree of this light into the world with him, that though it cannot bring him to heaven, yet it will carry him so far, that if he follows it faithfully he shall meet with another light, which shall carry him quite through. South's Sermons.
THROUGHRED, adj. [through and red, commonly through-bred.] Completely educated; completely taught.
A through-bred soldier weighs all present circumstances and all possible contingents. Grew's Cosmol.
THROUGHLIGHTED, adj. [through and light.] Lighted on both sides.
That the best pieces be placed where are the fewest lights;
therefore not only rooms windowed on both ends, called throughlights, but with two or more windows on the same side are enemies to this art. Watson's Architecture.

THROUGHLY, adv. [from through.] It is commonly written throughly, as coming from through.
1. Completely; fully; entirely; wholly.
The fight so throughly him dismiss'd,
That nought but death before his eyes he saw. Spenser.
Rice must be throughly boiled in respect of its hardness. Bac.
No less wisdom than what made the world can throughly understand so vast a design. Tilleyson.

2. Without reserve; sincerely.
Though it be somewhat singular for men truly and throughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this is a singular commendation. Tilleyson's Sermons.

Sheer o'er the crystal battlements.
Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some filthage behind.
Decay of Piety.
Ariosto, in his voyage of Astolpho to the moon, has a fine allegory of two swans, who, when time had thrown the writings of many poets into the river of oblivion, were ever in a readiness to secure the best, and bear them aloft into the temple of immortality.
Dryden.
When Ajax drives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow.
Pope.
The air-pump, barometer, and quadrant, were thrown

Some might be thrown away on fame and war.
Dryden.
He sigh'd, breath'd short, and wou'd have spoke,
But was too fierce to throw away the time.
Dryden.
The next in place and punishment are they
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools who, repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate.
Dryden.
In poetry the expression beautifies the design; if it be vicious or unpleasing, the cost of colouring is thrown away upon it.
Dryden's Dunciad.
The well-meaning man should rather consider what opportunities he has of doing good to his country, than throw away his time in deciding the rights of princes. Addison.
She threw away her money upon roaring bullies, that went about the streets.
Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
15. To throw away. To reject.

THR

- He hear'd a stone, and rising to the throw
He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe;
A rowl' assaulted by so rude a stroke,
With all its lofty battlements had shook. Addison.
2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the weaker throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakespeare.
If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all, is involved in the error of one throw. South's Sermons.
Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast.
Bentley's Sermons.
3. The space to which any thing is thrown.
I have ever narrated my friends,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leading. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
The Sirenum Scylla are two or three sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the south side of the island.
Addison.

1. A small singing bird.
Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds and thrushes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Pain, and a fine thrush, have been severally endeavouring to call off my attention; but both in vain. Pope.
2. [from thrush, as we say, a thrush, a thrush out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emiliaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous. Arbuthnot on Diet.
To THRUST, v. a. [thrust, Lat.]
1. To push any thing into matter, or between close bodies.
Thrust in thy fickle and resp. Rev. xiv. 15.

THUNDER. n. f. [Sunben, Sunon, Saxon; dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, Fr.]
 Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracks, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Mythenbrat.
 In popular and poetick language thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.
 I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
 Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakspeare.
 No more, thou thunder maller, shew
 Thy spite on mortal flies. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
 The revenging gods
 'Gainst paricides all the thunder bend. Shakspeare.
 The thunder
 Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless deep. Milton.
 3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
 So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
 On either side, that neither mail could hold Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.
 Here will we face this storm of insolence,
 Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
 Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.
TO THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

 He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakevill on Providence.
THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.] Explosion of thunder.
 The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
 One day did scorn the simple caraboe,
 Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
 That made all other fowls his thralls to be.
 When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
 The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
 Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
 And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear.
 When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
 It took us unprepar'd, and out of guard. Dryden.
THUNDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.
 How dare you, ghosts,
 Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
 Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?
 Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode, Crete had not been the cradle of their god's;
 On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
 And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.
 When the bold Typhoeus
 Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
 The lesser gods that shur'd his propitious state,
 All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
 The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.
TIAR. n. f. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat.] A drefs for the head;
Tiara, a diadem.
 His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
 Of beaming funny rays a golden tiar
 Circled his head. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 This royal robe, and this tiara wore Old Priam, and this golden scepter bore
 In full assemblies. Dryden's Æn.
 A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
 Her waste was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.
 Fairer the seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
 And better mien dispos'd, as better dress'd:
 A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd,
 To suffer bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.
TO TICK. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.
 Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
 Honey of roses, whither wilt thou flee?
 Hath some fond lover tick'd thee to thy bane?
 And wilt thou leave the church, and love a fie? Herbert.
TICK. n. f. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]
 1. Score; trust.
 If thou hast the heart to try't,
 I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
 And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras, p. i.
 When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.
 You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
 2. [Tique, Fr. teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.
 Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cressida.
 3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.
TO TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To run on score.
 2. To truit; to score.
 The money went to the lawyers; council went tick. Arb.
TICKEN. n. f. The same with tick. A fort of strong bedding. Bailey.
TICKET. n. f. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.
 There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band. Spenser.
 In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier on Envy.
 Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
 Disdains all loss of tickets or codille. Pope.
TO TICKLE. v. a. [titillo, Lat.]
 1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.
 Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
 Can tickle where she wounds. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
 The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling
 some parts of the body. Bacon.
 There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden.
 It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.
 2. To please by slight gratifications.
 Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.
 Expectation tickling skittish spirits
 Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.
 Such a nature
 Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which it treads on at noon. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 I cannot rule my spleen;
 My corn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.
 Duncie at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
 To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.
 A drunkard, the habitual thirst after his cups, drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.
TO TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.
 He with secret joy therefore Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
 And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
 Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain. Spenser.
TICKLE.

TID

- TICKLE, adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overthrown.
When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to beard him. Spenser on Ireland.
Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Shakespeare.
The state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakespeare.
- TICKLISH, adj. [from tickle.]
1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.
The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 766.
2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.
Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive dissenters and mutations than England was. Bacon.
Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some mens fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. i.
3. Difficult; nice.
How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate;
It had been civil in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. Swift.
TICKLISHNESS, n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.
- TICKTACK, n. f. [trick-tac, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey.

To TIDDER. }
- TIDE, n. f. [twis, Saxon; tijd, Dutch and Islandick.]
1. Time; season; while.
There they alight in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Fairy Queen, b. i.
They two forth passing,
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.
What hath this day deserv'd,
That it in golden letter should be set,
Among the high tides in the kalendar. Shakespeare, K. John.
At New-year's tide following the king chose him master of the horse. Wotton.
2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.
That motion of the water called tides is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the Moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the Moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the Moon from East to West, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebounds back again, and so makes floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.
3. Flood.
As in the tides of people once up there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon's Henry VII.
4. Stream; course.
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.
But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.
Continual tide
Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.
To TIDE, v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.
Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tid'd back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.
To TIDE, v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.
When, from his dirt, the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding hummer. Philips.
TIDGATE, n. f. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a basin. Bailey.
TIDESMAN, n. f. [tide and man.] A tidewater or custom-house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty of goods be paid and the ships unloaded. Bailey.
TIDWAITER, n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.
Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewaiters places. Swift.
TIDILY, adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.
TIDINESS, n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIE

- TIDINGS, n. f. [tidan, Saxon; to happen, to betide; tidunda, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened.
When her eyes lie on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.
They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heaven. Milton.
Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance?
What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.
The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was propounded and ratified, was the eternal son of his bosom. Rogers's Sermon.
- TYDY, adj. [tidis, Islandick.]
1. Seasonable.
If weather be faire and tidis, thy grain
Make speedie carriage, for feare of a raine. Taylor.
2. Neat; ready.
Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay's Poet.
3. It seems to be here put by mistake for tidy.
Thou whorson tidy Bartholomew bear pig, when wilt thou leave fighting. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
- TO TIE, v. a. [tan, Saxon.]
1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.
Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. 1 Sam. vi. 7.
Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
2. To knit; to complicate.
We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.
3. To hold; to fasten.
In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.
Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.
4. To hinder; to obstruct.
Death that hath ta'n her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.
Melantius slays,
You have my promise, and my hasty word
Refrains my tongue, and ties not up my sword. Wallar.
Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands; but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts. Addison.
5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.
Although they profess they agree with us touching a pre-script form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hosker, b. v.
It is the cowardly terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him. Stillingfleet.
They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.
Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words.
The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy talk; use will give it facility. Locke.
They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment.
A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbutnot.
6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical.
TIE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Knot; fastening.
2. Bond; obligation.
The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.
No forest, cave, or savage den,
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts, they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Wallar.

TIL

- 'Tis not the coarser tie of human law
That binds their peace, but harmony itself Attuning all their passions into love. Thomson's Spring.
- TIER, n. f. [tiere, tiere, old Fr. tyer, Dutch.] A row; a rank.
Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Knolles.
TIERCE, n. f. [tiere, tiere, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe. Benj. Johnson.
Go now deny his tierce.
Wit, like tierce claret, when't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Dorset.
- TYERCET, n. f. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.
TIFF, n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]
1. Liquor; drink.
I, whom gripping penury furrounds,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiffs,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.
2. A fit of peevishness or fullness; a pet.
To TIFF, v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel. A low word.
TYFFARY, n. f. [tyffer, to dress up, old Fr. Skinner.] Very thin silk.
The smock of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffonies. Brown.
TIGER, n. f. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital. Bailey.
TIGER, n. f. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.
When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkind'd swiftness will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Tigris, in the medals of Trajan, is drawn like an old man, and by his side a tiger. Peacock on Drawing.
Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson's Spring.
- TIGHT, adj. [ticht, Dutch.]
1. Tense; close; not loose.
If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Moson's Mech. Exercise.
I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight, I may be filled all of a sudden. Arbutnot's Hist. of F. Bull.
Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a fash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Gulliver's Travels.
2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.
A tight maid ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning and unloos the flask. Dryden's Juv.
The girl was a tight clever wench as any. Arbutnot.
O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.
Drest her again gentle and neat,
And rather tight than great. Swift.
To TIGHTEN, v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.
TIGHTEN, n. f. [from tighten.] A ribbon or string by which women straiten their cloaths.
TIGHTLY, adv. [from tight.]

2. Neatly; not idly.
Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail, like my pinnace, to these golden shores. Shakespeare.
Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity: tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much. Dryden.
TIGHTNESS, n. f. [from tight.] Closeness; not looseness.
The bones are inflexible, which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the firmness and tightness of their union. Woodward on Fossils.
TIGRESS, n. f. [from tiger.] The female of the tiger.
It is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry. Addison's Spectator, N° 81.
TIRE, n. f. [tiks, Swedish; teke, Dutch; tiene, Fr.]
1. The loufe of dogs or sheep. See TICK.
Lice and tires are bred by the sweat close kept, and somewhat arched by the hair. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 696.
2. It is in Shakespeare the name of a dog, in which sense it is used in Scotland. [from tirk, Runic, a little dog.]
Avant, you curs!
Hound or spaniel, brach or hym,
Or bobtail tire, or trundle tail. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
TILE, n. f. [tegle, Saxon; tege, Dutch; tuile, Fr. tegula,

TIL

- Italian.] Thin plates of baked clay used to cover houses.
The roof is all tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Earth turned into brick serveth for building as stone doth;
and the like of tile. Bacon's Physical Remains.
In at the window he climbs, or o'er the tiles. Milton.
Worse than all the clat'ring tiles, and worse
Than thousand padders was the poet's curse. Dryden.
Tile pins made of oak or fir they drive into holes made in the plain tiles, to hang them upon their lathing. Moson.
- TO TILE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover with tiles.
Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 537.
ed.
Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

2. [Corrupted from tia or tiara, or attire.] A head-dress.
On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and oiches. Fairy Queen.

Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakespeare.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame, the tire
That crowns his hated head on high, appears. Crashaw.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A his from all the finaky tire went round. Pope.

For what to morrow shall disclose,
May spoil what you to night propose:
England may change, or Cloc stray;
Love and life are for to day. Prior.

TOAD. n. f. [raze, Saxon.] An animal resembling a frog; but the frog leaps, the toad crawls: the toad is accounted venomous, I believe truly.

From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most dross-spotted traitor. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love. Shakespeare's Othello.

In the great plague there were seen, in divers ditches about London, many toads that had tails three inches long, whereas toads usually have no tails. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

In hollow caverns vermin make abode,
The hissing serpent, and the swelling toad. Dryden.

TOADEISH. n. f. A kind of sea-fish.

TOADELAX. n. f. A plant.

TOADSTONE. n. f. [toad and stone.] A concretion supposed to be found in the head of a toad.

The toadstone premeditated to be found in the head of that animal, is not a thing impossible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The grilly toadfish grown there brought I see,
And loathing paddocks landing on the same. Spenser.

Another imperfect plant like a mushroom, but sometimes as broad as a hat, called toadfish, is not infrequent. Bacon.

TOAST. v. a. [torres, tostum, Lat.]

1. To dry or heat at the fire.
Put up thy sword betime,
Or I'll to maul you and your toasting iron. Shakespeare.

His breath stinks with eating toasted cheese. Shakespeare.

The earth whereof the grafs is soon parched with the sun, and toasted, is commonly forced earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To allure mice I find no other magick, than to draw out a piece of toasted cheese. Brown.

2. To name when a health is drunk. To toast is used commonly when women are named.

Several popish gentlemen toasted many loyal healths. Add.

We'll try the empire you so long have boasted;
And if we are not prais'd, we'll not be toasted. Prior.

TOAST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bread dried before the fire.
You are both as rheumatick as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confimities. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Every third day take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds new drawn, and sprinkled with loaf sugar. Bacon's Physical Remains.

2. Bread dried and put into liquor.
Where's then the faucy boat
Co-rival'd greatness? or to harbour feed,
Or made a toast for Neptune? Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.

Some fquire, perhaps, you take delight to rack;
Whose game is whilk, whose treat a toast in sack. Pope.

3. A celebrated woman whose health is often drunk.
I shall likewise mark out every toast, the club in which the was elected, and the number of votes that were on her side. Addison's Guard. No. 107.

Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,
The wife man's passion, and the vain man's toast?
Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd? Pope.

TOASTER. n. f. [from toast.] He who toasts.

We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry faucy ill-bred fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.

TOBACCO. n. f. [from Tobaco or Tchago in America.]

The flower of the tobacco consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and divided at the top into five deep segments, which expand like a star; the ovary becomes an oblong roundish membranaceous fruit, which is divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and is filled with small roundish seeds. Miller.

It is a planet now I see;
And, if I err not, by his proper

Bread or tobacco may be neglected; but reason at first recommends their trial, and custom makes them pleasant. Locke.

Salts are to be drest out of the clay by water, before it be fit for the making tobacco-pipes or baccs. Woodward.

TOBACCONIST. n. f. [from tobacco.] A preparer and vender of tobacco.

TOB. n. f. [tote haar, a lock of hair, German. Skinner. I believe rightly.]

TOI

1. A bush; a thick shrub.
Within the ivie toad,
There shrouded was the little god;
I heard a busy bustling. Spenser's Pastorals.

2. A certain weight of wool, twenty eight pounds.
Every eleven weather tods, every tod yields a pound and odd shillings. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

TOE. n. f. [ta, Saxon; teen, Dutch.] The divided extremities of the feet; the fingers of the feet.
Come all you piers,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, topful
Of direct cruelty. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Sport that wrinkled care derides,
And laughter holding both his sides;
Come and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastick toe. Milton.

Last to enjoy her sense of feeling,
A thousand little nerves the fends
Quite to our toes, and fingers ends. Prior.

TOFORE. adv. [tofozan, Saxon.] Before. Obsolete.

It is an epilogue to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shak.

So shall they depart the manor with the corn and the bacon tofore him that hath won it. Spettator, No. 607.

TOFT. n. f. [toftum, law Latin.] A place where a inundage has stood. Cowel and Ash.

TOGED. adj. [togatus, Lat.] Gowned; dressed in gowns.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the toged confuls can propose
As masterly as he; meer prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. Shakespeare's Othello.

TOGETHER. adv. [togethepe, Saxon.]

While he and I live together, I shall not be thought the worst poet. Dryden.

5. Without intermission.
The Portuguese expected his return for almost an age together after the battle. Dryden.

They had a great debate concerning the punishment of one of their admirals, which lasted a month together. Addison.

6. In concert.
The subject is his confederacy with Henry the eighth, and the ways they made together upon France. Addison on Italy.

7. In continuity.
Some tree's broad leaves together few'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round. Milton.

8. TOGETHER with. In union with; in a state of mixture with.

Take the bad together with the good. Dryden's Juvenal.

TO TOLL. v. n. [telan, Saxon; tollen, Dutch.] To labour;
perhaps originally, to labour in tillage.

This Percy was the man nearest my foul;
Who, like a brother, toll'd in my affairs,
And laid his love and life under my foot. Shakespeare.

Others ill-fated are condemn'd to toll
Their tedious life, and mourn their purpose blasted
With fruitless act. Prior.

He views the main that ever tolls below. Thomson.

TO TOLL. v. a.

1. To labour; to work at.
Toll'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride
Th' untractable abyss. Milton.

2. To weary; to overlabour.
Then, toll'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy. Shakespeare's Richard II.

TOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; fatigue.
They live to their great, both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed. Hooker, b. v.

Not to irk some toil, but to delight
He made us. Milton.

2. [Toile, toiles, Fr. tela, Latin.] Any net or snare woven or meshed.

She looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

He had so placed his horsemen and footmen in the woods, that he shut up the Christians as it were in a toil. Knaples.

All great spirits
Bear great and sudden change with such impatience
As a Numidian lion, when first caught, Endures the toil that holds him. Denham's Sophy.

A fly falls into the toil of a spider.
Fantastick honour, thou hast fram'd a toil
Thyself, to make thy love thy virtues spoil. Dryden.

26 P
TOILET.

TOL

- TOILET. n. f. [toilette, Fr.] A dressing table.
The merchant from the exchange returns in peace,
And the long labours of the toilet cease. Pope.
- TOILSOME. n. f. [from toil.] Laborious; weary.
This were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet. Milton.
While here we dwell,
What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks? Milton.
Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear;
Recall those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days,
Still hear thy Parnel in his living lays. Pope.
- TOILSOMENESS. n. f. [from toilsome.] Wearisomeness; laboriousness.
- TOKEN. n. f. [taikns, Gothick; taen, Saxon; teyken, Dutch.]
1. A sign.
Shew me a token for good, that they which hate me may see it. Psal. lxxxvi. 17.
2. A mark.
Whereforever you see ingratitude, you may as infallibly conclude, that there is a growing flock of ill-nature in that breast, as you may know that man to have the plague upon whom you see the token. South's Sermons.
3. A memorial of friendship; an evidence of remembrance.
Here is a letter from queen Hecuba.
A token from her daughter, my fair love. Shakespeare.
Whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend. Shakespeare.
Pigwiggan gladly would commend
Some token to queen Mab to fend,
Were worthy of her wearing. Drayton's Nymphid.
- TOKEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make known. Not in use.
What in time proceeds, Shakespeare.
May token to the future our past deeds.
The acts of God to human ears Cannot, without process of speech, be told. Milton.
- TO TOLL. v. a. [This seems to be some barbarous provincial word.] To train; to draw by degrees.
Whatever you observe him to be more frightened at than he should, toll him on to by insensible degrees, till at last he masters the difficulty. Locke.
- TOLERABLE. adj. [tolerable, Fr. tolerabilis, Lat.]
1. Supportable; that may be endured or supported.
Yourself, who have fought them, ye so excuse, as that ye would have men to think ye judge them not allowable, but tolerable only, and to be borne with, for the furtherance of your purposes, till the corrupt estate of the church may be better reformed. Hooker.
It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for that city. Mat. x. 15.
Cold and heat scarce tolerable. Milton.
There is nothing of difficulty in the external performance, but what hypocrisy can make tolerable to itself. Tillotson.
2. Not excellent; not contemptible; passible.
The reader may be assured of a tolerable translation. Dryden.
Princes have it in their power to keep a majority on their side by any tolerable administration, till provoked by continual oppressions. Swift.

The person to whom this head belonged laughed frequently, and on particular occasions had acquitted himself tolerably at a ball. Addison's Spect. No. 275.
- TOLERANCE. n. f. [tolerantia, Lat. tolerance, Fr.] Power of enduring; act of enduring.
Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him: Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, if you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon's Apophth.
There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- TO TOLERATE. v. a. [tolero, Lat. tolerare, Fr.] To allow so as not to hinder; to suffer.
Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker, b. iv.
We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and fatys; for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities require their substantial falsities. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

TOM

- Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Decay of Piety.
Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.
We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.
- TOLERATION. n. f. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.
I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South's Sermons.
- TOLL. n. f. [This word seems derived from tollu, Lat. toll, Saxon; tol, Dutch; told, Danish; toll, Welsh; tallo, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.
Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage.
Empion and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grift. Bacon.
The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbutnot.
- TO TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To pay toll or tallage.
I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this I'll none of him. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for, And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras, p. ii.
2. To take toll or tallage.
The meale the more yeeldeth, if servant be true, And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tusser.
3. [I know not whence derived.] To found as a single bell.
The first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a fullen bell, Remember'd tolling a departed friend. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillington.
- Toll, toll.*
Gentle bell, for the foul
Of the pure ones
You love to hear of some prodigious tale,
The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whale. Dryden.
They give their bodies due repose at night;
When hollow murmurs of their evening bells Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dry.
All the bells toll'd in different notes. Pope.
With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,
Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope's Dunciad.
The maid asks who the bell toll'd for? Swift.
- TO TOLL. v. a. [tolls, Lat.]
1. To ring a bell.
When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the fame is known to the searchers. Gravett.
2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.
An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tells the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.
3. To take away. Obsolete.
The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 365.
- TOLLBOOTH. n. f. [toll and booth.] A prison.

- TOLLUTATION. n. f. [tolluto, Latin.] The act of pacing or ambling.
They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tollutation or ambling. Brown's Vulgar Err.
Authors have not writ
Whether tollutation or succulation.
- TOMB. n. f. [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Lat.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.
Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below, Shakespeare.
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb.
Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald, winged, with a fish and an hour-glass. Peacocks on Drawing.
- Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb,
Let her possess in peace that narrow room.
The secret wound with which I bleed
Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my herse,
But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.
- TO TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.
Souls of boys were there,
And youths, that tomb'd before their parents were. Moyle.
To'mbles.

TON

- TONLESS. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.
Lay these bones in an unworthy urn, Tonless, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.
- TONBOY. n. f. [Tom a diminutive of Thomas, and boy.] A mean fellow; sometimes a wild coarse girl.
A lady
Faster'd to an empery, to be partner'd
With tonboys, hir'd with that self-exhibition Which your own coffers yield! Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
- TOME. n. f. [Fr. tome.]
1. One volume of many.
2. A book.
All those venerable books of scripture, all those sacred tomes and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.
- TOMTIT. n. f. [See TITMOUSE.] A titmouse; a small bird.
You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spectator.
- TON. n. f. [tonne, Fr. See TUN.] A measure or weight.
Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, and when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand tons of their great shipping. Bacon.
- TON. [In the names of places, and seems to be from dun, TUN.] A run, a hedge or wall, and this seems to be from dun, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills for the sake of defence and protection in times of war. Gibson's Camden.
- TOKE. n. f. [ton, Fr. tonus, Lat.]
1. Note; found.
Sounds called tones are ever equal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The strength of a voice or found makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear Listens delighted. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
2. Accent; found of the voice.
Palamon replies, Dryden.
Eager his tones, and ardent were his eyes.
3. A whine; a mournful cry.
Made children, with your tones, to run for't
As bad as bloody-bones, or Lunsford. Hudibras, p. iii.
4. A particular or affected found in speaking.
5. Elasticity; power of extension and contraction.
Drinking too great quantities of this decoction may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbutnot.
- TONG. n. f. [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle. This word is usually written tongue, but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.
Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong
Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong. Fa. 2.
- TONGS. n. f. [Frang, Saxon; tang, Dutch.] An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing: as of coals in the fire.
Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the fame
With liquid waves. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
They turn the glowing mass with crooked tongs;
The fiery work proceeds. Dryden's Æn.
Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tong, stronger and tooth-ed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- TONGUE. n. f. [tung, Saxon; tonghe, Dutch.]
1. The instrument of speech in human beings.
My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And ev'ry tongue brings in a several tale,
And ev'ry tale condemns me for a villain. Shakespeare.

- TONSIL. n. f. [tonsilla, Fr. tonsilla, Lat.]
Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves, through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.
- TONSURE. n. f. [tonsura, Fr. tonsura, Lat.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being shorn.
The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.
- TOO. adv. [to, Saxon.]
1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.
Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Sprat's Sermons.
It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.
These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.
2. It

2. It is sometimes doubled to encrease its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside. Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt. Shakespeare. Sometimes it would be full, and then Oh! too too soon decrease again; Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall, There wou'd appear no hope at all. Suckling.
3. Likewise; also. See what a scourge is laid upon your hate; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet. Let on my cup no wars be found, Left those incite to quarrels too, Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham. The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other mens sins, is evident from the text and from experience too. South's Sermons. It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

Let those eyes that view The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope. Took, the preterite, and sometimes the participle passive of take.

Thy soldiers All levied in my name, have in my name Took their discharge. Shakespeare. King Lear. He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South's Sermons. Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden. The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison. This took up some of his hours every day. Spenser. The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift. Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope's Statius.

TOOL. n. f. [tol, tool, Saxon.] 1. Any instrument of manual operation. In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool it will be dry. Bacon. Arm'd with such gardening tools as art, yet rude, Guilds of fire had form'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

2. A hiring; a wretch who acts at the command of another. He'd choose To talk with wits in dirty floozes; And scorn the tools with flares and garters, So often seen cavelling Charters. Swift. To TOOT. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tozan, Saxon, contracted from tozean, to know or examine.] To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and sily. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete. I cast to go a shooting, Long wand'ring up and down the land, With bow and bolts on either hand, For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser's Poet.

TOOTH. n. f. plural teeth. [toð, Saxon; tand, Dutch.] The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; they are formed in the cavities of the jaws, and about the seventh or eighth month after birth they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw, tear the periostrum and gums, which being very sensible create a violent pain: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw, because they are the thinnest and the sharpest; after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders, because they are thickest and bluntest: about the seventh year of age they are thrust out by new teeth which then begin to sprout, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have been observed to shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientie. Quincy.

Avaunt, you curs! Be thy mouth or black or white, Tooth that poisons if it bite. Shakespeare. King Lear. Defert deserves with characters of brass A fortified residence against the teeth of time, And razure of oblivion. Shakespeare. The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unlighty length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray on the Creation.

TOO

TORREFACTION. n. f. [torrefactio, Fr. torrefacio, Latin.] The act of drying by the fire.
 When torrefied sulphur makes bodies black, why does torrefactio make sulphur itself black. Boyle on Colours.
 If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale; if it be sunned too long it suffereth torrefaction. Brown.

TO TORREFF. v. a. [torreficere, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] To dry by the fire.
 In the sulphur of bodies torrefied consist the principles of inflammability. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The Africans are more peculiarly scorched and torrefied from the sun by addition of dryness from the soil. Brown.
 Divers learned men assign, for the cause of blackness, the sooty steam of adust, or torrefied sulphur. Boyle on Colours.
Torrefied sulphur makes bodies black; I desire to know why torrefaction makes sulphur itself black? Boyle.
 Another clifter is composed of two heminae of white wine, half a hemina of honey; Ægyptian nitre torrefied a quarta drant.

TORRENT. n. f. [torrent, Fr. torrent, Lat.] 1. A sudden stream raised by summer showers.
 The near in blood, Sandys on Job.
 Forfake me like the torrent of a flood;
 Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
 Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;
 No torrents swell the low Mohayne,
 The world will say he durst not pais. Prior.

2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.
 Not far from Caucasus are certain steep falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to fet many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true.
 The memory of those who, out of duty and conscience, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompence due to their virtue. Clarendon.
 When shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
 The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
 Undams his wat'ry stores, huge torrents flow,
 Templing the thirsty fever of the field. Dryden's Georg.
 Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
 Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age. Pope.

TORRENT. adj. [torrent, Lat.] Rolling in a rapid stream.
 Pierce Phlegeton,
 Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage. Milton.
TORRID. adj. [torride, Fr. torridus, Lat.] 1. Parched; dried with heat.
 Galen's commentators mention a twofold dryness; the one concomitated with a heat, which they call a torrid tabes; the other with a coldness, when the parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat. Harvey on Consump.
 2. Burning; violently hot.

This with torrid heat,
 And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
 Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton's Par. Lost.
 3. It is particularly applied to the regions or zone between the tropicks.

Columbus first
 Found a temperate in a torrid zone;
 The fervid air fann'd by a cooling breeze. Dryden.
 Those who amidst the torrid regions live,
 May they not gales unknown to us receive?
 See daily show'rs rejoice the thirsty earth,
 And blest the flow'ry buds succeeding birth. Prior.

TORSEL. n. f. [torse, Fr.] Any thing in a twisted form.
 When you lay any timber on brickwork, as torsels for mantle trees to lie on, or lintels over windows, lay them in loam. Mason's Mech. Exercise.
TORSION. n. f. [torso, Lat.] The act of turning or twisting.
TORT. n. f. [tort, Fr. tortum, low Latin.] Mischief; injury; calamity. Obsolete.
 Then gan triumphant trumpets found on high,
 That sent to heaven the echoed report
 Of their new joy, and happy victory Against him that had been long oppress'd with tort,
 And fast imprisoned in sieged fort. Fa. Qu. b. i.
 He dreadless had them come to court,
 For no wild beasts should do them any tort. Spenser.
 Your disobedience and ill managing
 Of actions, lo! for want of due support,
 Refer I justly to a further spring.
 Spring of sedition, strife, oppression, tort. Fairfax, b. i.

TORTILE. n. f. [tortilis, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.
TORTION. n. f. [from tortus, Latin.] Torment; pain. Not in use.
 All purgers have a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tortion in the stomach and belly. Bacon.
TORTIOUS. adj. [from tort.] Injurious; doing wrong. Spens.
TORTIVE. adj. [from tortus, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.
 Knots by the confux of meeting lap,
 Inset the found pine, and divert his grain
 Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare.
TORTOISE. n. f. [tortue, French.] 1. An animal covered with a hard shell: there are tortoises both of land and water.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator stuf. Shakespeare.
 A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.
 2. A form into which the ancient foldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.

Their

TOU

He gave the little wealth he had To build a house for fools and mad;
To shew by one fatyrick touch,
No nation wanted it so much.

14. Animadversion; censure.
I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret.

Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam, severe.

15. Exact performance of agreement.
Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keep
Is pay and dispatch him, yet ever ye sleepe.

Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch.

I keep touch both with my promise to Philopolis, and with my own usual frugality in these kind of collations.

He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keep touch with him.

16. A small quantity intermingled.
Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish.

17. A hint; slight notice given.
The king your master knows their disposition very well;
a small touch will put him in mind of them.

18. A cant word for a slight essay.
Print my preface in such a form as, in the bookfellers phrases, will make a fixpenny touch.

TOUCHABLE. adj. [from touch.] Tangible; that may be touched.

TOUCH-HOLE. n. f. [touch and hole.] The hole through which the fire is conveyed to the powder in the gun.

In a piece of ordnance, if you speak in the touch-hole, and another lay his ear to the mouth of the piece, the sound is far better heard than in the open air.

TOUCHINESS. n. f. [from touching.] Peevishness; irascibility.
My friends relented it as a motion not guided with such discretion as the touchiness of those times required.

TOUCHING. prep. [This word is originally a participle of touch.] With respect, regard, or relation to.

Touching things which belong to discipline, the church hath authority to make canons and decrees, even as we read in the apostles times it did.

Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must to tender,
Whose ruin you three fought, that to her laws
We do deliver you.

The heavens and the earth remained in the same state in which they were created, as touching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicity of perfection in respect of beauty.

Touching the debt, he took himself to be acquitted thereof.

Socrates chose rather to die than renounce or conceal his judgment touching the unity of the Godhead.

TOUCHING. adj. [from touch.] Pathetic; affecting; moving.
TOUCHINGLY. adv. [from touch.] With feeling emotion; in a pathetic manner.

This last fable shows how touchingly the poet argues in love affairs.

TOUCHMENOT. n. f. An herb.

TOUCHSTONE. n. f. [touch and stone; pierre de touche, Fr.]
1. Stone by which metals are examined.

Chilon would say, that gold was tried with the touchstone, and men with gold.

If he intends to deal clearly, why does he make the touchstone faulty, and the standard uncertain.

2. Any test or criterion.
Is not this their rule of such sufficiency, that we should use it as a touchstone to try the orders of the church?

The work, the touchstone of the nature, is;
And by their operations things are known.

Money serves for the touchstone of common honesty.

Time is the surest judge of truth: I am not vain enough to think I have left no faults in this, which that touchstone will not discover.

TOUCHWOOD. n. f. [touch and wood.] Rotten wood used to catch the fire struck from the flint.

A race of resolute stout trees they are, so abounding with metal and heat, that they quickly take fire, and become touchwood.

To make white powder, the powder of rotten willows is best; (punk, or touchwood prepared might make it rustier.

TOUCHY. adj. [from touch.] Peevish; irascible; irascible;
apt to take fire. A low word.

You are upon a touchy point, and therefore treat so nice a subject with proportionable caution.

You are so touchy, and take things so hotly, I am sure there must be some mistake in this.

TOUGH. adj. [tough, Saxon.]

1. Yielding without fracture; not brittle.
Of bodies some are fragile, and some are tough, and not fragile.

2. Stiff; not easily flexible.
The bow he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh.

Fate with nature's law would strive;
To shew plain-dealing once an age may thrive;
And when so tough a frame the could not bend,
Exceeded her commission to befriend.

3. Not easily injured or broken.
O fides you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?

A body made of brass the crone demands
For her lov'd nursing, strung with nerves of wire,
Tough to the last, and with no toil to tire.

4. Viscous; clammy; rosy.
To TOUGHEN. v. n. [from tough.] To grow tough.
Hops off the kiln lay three weeks to cool, give and toughen, else they will break to powder.

TOUGHNESS. n. f. [from tough.]

1. Not brittleness; flexibility.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for three days; but they must be put into which the water will not enter.

2. Viscosity; tenacity; clamminess; glutinousness.
In the first stage the viscosity or toughness of the fluids should be taken off by diluents.

3. Firmness against injury.
I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness.

TOUPET. n. f. [Fr.] A curl; an artificial lock of hair.

TOUR. n. f. [tour, French.]

1. Ramble; roving journey.
I made the tour of all the king's palaces.

Were it permitted, he'd make the tour of the whole system of the sun.

2. Turn; revolution. In both these senses it is rather French than English.

First Ptolemy his scheme celestial wrought,
And of machines a wild provision brought;
Orbs centrick and eccentric he prepares,
Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres

In order plac'd, and with bright globes inlaid,
To solve the tours by heavenly bodies made.

3. In Milton it is probably tour; i. e. tour, elevation.
The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.

TOURNAMENT. n. f. [tournoiment, low Lat.]

TOURNEY. n. f. [from tournament, low Lat.]

1. Tilt; joust; military sport; mock encounter.
They might under the pretence
Of tilts and tournaments,
Provide them horse and armour for defence.

For jousts, tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are the chariots, wherein challengers make their entry.

Whence came all those jousts, tiltings, and tournaments, so much in use in these parts.

He liv'd with all the pomp he cou'd devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize,
But found no favour in his lady's eyes.

2. The spouals of Hippolite the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen.

3. Milton uses it simply for encounter; shock of battle.
With cruel tournament the squadrons join!
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses, and arms, th' insanguin'd field.

TO TOURNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To tilt in the lists.
An elfin born of noble state,
Well could he tourney, and in lists debate.

TOURNISQUET. n. f. [French.] A bandage used in amputations, straitened or relaxed by the turn of a handle.

If the orifice does not readily appear, loosen the tourniquet, and the effusion of blood will direct you to it.

TO TOUSE. v. a. [probably of the same original with touseize, tose.] To pull; to tear; to haul; to drag; whence touser or touser, the name of a rascall.

As a bear whom angry curs have touz'd,
Having off thak'd them and escap'd their hands,
Becomes more fell, and all that him withstands
Treads down and overthrows.

Take him hence; to th' rack with him: we'll touze you joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.

To touze such things as flutter
To honest Bounce is bread and butter.

TOW. n. f. [top, Saxon.] Flax or hemp beaten and combed into a filamentous substance.

history, and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the reformation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
They do but trace over the paths beaten by the ancients, or comment, crick, or flourish upon them. Temple.
To this haste of the mind a not due tracing of the arguments to their true foundation is owing. Locke.
2. To follow with exactness.
That servile path thou nobly dost decline,
Of tracing word by word, and line by line. Denham.
3. To mark out.
He allows the soul power to trace images on the brain, and perceive them. Locke.
His pen can trace out a true quotation. Swift.
4. To walk over.
Men as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead. Pa. Qu.
We do trace this alley up and down. Shakespeare.
- TRACER. n. f. [from trace.] One that traces.
Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice. Howell.
- TRACK. n. f. [trac, old French; traccia, Italian.]
1. Mark left upon the way by the foot or otherwise.
Following the track of Satan. Milton.
Hung by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around,
The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood inscrib'd the dusty ground. Dryden.
Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footstep of wisdom in its constitution. Bentley.
2. A road; a beaten path.
With track oblique fidelong he works his way. Milton.
Behold Torquatus the same track pursue,
And next, the two devoted Decii view. Dryden's Æn.
- To TRACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To follow by the footstep or marks left in the way.
As shepherd's cur that in dark evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beast's tread. Pa. Quere.

TRA

- He was not only a professed imitator of Horace, but a learned plagiarist in all the others; you track him everywhere in their flow. Dryden.
- TRA'CKLESS. adj. [from track.] Untrodden; marked with no footstep.
Lost in trackless fields of shining day,
Unable to discern the way,
Which Naffau's virtue only cou'd explore. Prior.
- TRACT. n. f. [tractus, Lat.]
1. Any kind of extended substance.
2. A region; a quantity of land.
Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.
Heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.
Monte Circeo, by Homer called infula Æea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Milton.
3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.
The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh. Howell.
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.
As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Holder.
4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.
The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourse, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
5. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for track.
The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakespeare.
6. [Tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a small book.
The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.
- TRA'CTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. tractabile, Fr.]
1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.
For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, when-soever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker, b. v.
Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wile, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Criseida.
- Tractable* obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakespeare, Henry VII.
If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson's Sermons.
If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit to it.
Locke on Education.
2. Palpable; such as may be handled.
The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transients neither to be seen nor felt. Holder on Time.
- TRA'CTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.
It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of childrens tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.
- TRA'CTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.
Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.
We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hob.
- TRA'CTION. n. f. [from tractus, Lat.] The act of drawing;
the state of being drawn.
The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Holder.
- TRA'CTILE. n. f. [tractilis, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.
The consistencies of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough;
flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length;
intradile. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 839.
- TRACTILITY. adj. [from tractile.] The quality of being tracti- tile. Silver.

TRA

- Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham.
- TRADE. n. f. [trattu, Italian.]
1. Traffic; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods; or for money.
Whoever commands the sea commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Rel.
Trade increases in one place and decays in another. Temple.
2. Occupation; particular employment whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.
Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser on Ireland.
How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade. Shakespeare.
[I] mountebank their loves, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.
The rude Equicoline
Hunting their sport, and plund ring was their trade. Dryd.
Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden's Juv.
The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains. Dryden.
The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way;
the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbutnot on Coins.
3. Instruments of any occupation.
The shepherd bears
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden's Virgil.
4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.
Call some of young years to train them up in that trade;
and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.
- To TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.
He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. Luke xix. 15.
Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded. Arbutnot on Coins.
Maximian traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot.
2. To act merely for money.
Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
3. Having a trading wind.
They on the trading flood ply tow'd the pole. Milton.
- To TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.
They were they merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market. Ezek. xxvii. 13.
- TRADE-WIND. n. f. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropics.
Thus to the eastern wealth through forms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will surely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.
His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot.
Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.
- TRA'DED. adj. [from trade.] Veried; practised.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such a rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
Eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare, Troilus and Criseida.
- TRA'DER. n. f. [from trade.]
1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.
Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders,
Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.
Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal. Child on Trade.
That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.
2. One long used in the methods of money getting; a practitioner.
TRA'DESFOLK. n. f. [trade and folk.] People employed in trades.
By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA

- TRA'DESMAN. n. f. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.
I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakespeare.
- They rather had beheld Diffident numbers peering streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Order a trade thither and thence to as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.
Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings. Grant.
M. Jordain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.
From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.
Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.
Boastful and rough, your first son is a quack;
The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar. Pope's Ep.
- TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffic.
Ye tradeful merchants that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain. Spenser.
- TRA'DITION. n. f. [tradition, Fr. traditio, Lat.]
1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.
To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker, b. iii.
2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.
They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint, Left only in those written records pure. Milton.
Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;
But far'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day. Pope's Statius.
- TRA'DITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]
1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.
Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.
If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional cloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.
2. Oblivant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.
God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of fantasy!
You are too senseless oblitante, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
- TRA'DITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]
1. By transmission from age to age.
There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.
It crosteth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown's Vulgar Err.
- TRA'DITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition.
Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inevitable truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.
Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.
The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Addison on the Christian Religion.
- TRA'DITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trado, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.
Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryd. H. and Pent.
- To TRA'DUCE. v. a. [traduco, Lat. traduire, Fr.]
1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.
The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all mens devotion towards them. Hooker, b. v.
Thofe

TRA

- Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the public duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hester, b. iv.
- Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and designing they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue.
- From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden's Fob.
2. To propagate; to circulate by deriving one from another. None are so gross as to contend for this, That souls from bodies may traduced be; Between whose natures no proportion is. When root and branch in nature still agree. Dowies.
- From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glanville's Scip.
- TRADUCEMENT. n. f. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy. Rome must know The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- TRADUCER. n. f. [from traduce.] A false censurer; a calumniator. The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived. Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.
- TRADUCTION. n. f. [from traduce.] 1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation. The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.
- If by traduction came thy mind, Our wonder is the less to find A soul so charming from a flock so good; Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.
2. Tradition; transmission from one to another. Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths conatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.
3. Conveyance. Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping; though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale's Origin of Manhood.
4. Translation. The reports and fables have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon.
- TRAFFICK. n. f. [traffique, Fr. traffico, Italian.] 1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick's thy god. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
- My father A merchant of great traffick through the world. Shakespeare.
- As the first of these was, for his great wisdom, filed the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 41.
2. Commodities; subject of traffick. You'll see a draggled damsel From Billingsgate her filthy traffick bear. Gay.
- TO TRAFFICK. v. n. [traffiquer, Fr. trafficare, Italian.] 1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities. They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
2. To trade meanly or mercenarily. Saucy and overbold! how did you dare To trade and traffick with Macbeth, In riddles and affairs of death? How hast thou dur'd to think so vilely of me, That I would condescend to thy mean arts, And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin? Rowe.
- TRAFFICKER. n. f. [traffiqueur, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant. Your Argosies with portly sail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Do overpeer the petty traffickers That curtsy to them. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Add.
- TRAFFICANTH. n. f. [trafficantha, Lat.] A sort of gum to

TRA

- which this name has been given, because it proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called. Trescan.
- TRAGEDIAN. n. f. [from tragedy; tragædia, Lat.] 1. A writer of tragedy. Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Stillingfleet.
2. An actor of tragedy. I can counterfeit the deep tragedian; Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- To well-lung'd tragedian's rage They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.
- TRAGEDY. n. f. [tragedie, Fr. tragædia, Lat.] 1. A dramatic representation of a serious action. Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril, Will now conclude their plotted tragedy. Shakespeare.
- All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor's holy living.
- Imitate the sister of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action. Dryden.
- An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.
- There to her heart sad tragedy address The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast. Pope.
2. Any mournful or dreadful event. I shall laugh at this, That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. K. Ch.
- TRAGICAL. adj. [tragicus, Lat. tragique, Fr.] 1. Relating to tragedy. The root whereof and tragic effect, Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfullest muse of nine, That won'tst fit the tragic stage for to direct, In funeral complaints and wailful time Reveal to me. Spenser's Muirpotamus.
- Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward; And the beholders of this tragic play, Th' adulterer Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray, Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shakespeare. R. III.
2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful. A dire induction I am witness to; And will to France, hoping the consequence Will prove as bitter, black, and tragic. Shakespeare.
- The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful days, Is crept into the bosom of the sea; And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades, That drag the tragic melancholy night. Shakespeare. Ham. VI.
- Why look you still so stern and tragic? Shakespeare.
- So tragic and merited a fate Shall swallow those who God and justice hate. Sandys.
- I now must change those notes to tragic. Milton.
- The tale of this song is a pretty tragic story; and pleases because it is a copy of nature. Addison.
- Bid them dress their bloody altars With every circumstance of tragic pomp. Rave.
- TRAGICALLY. adv. [from tragic.] 1. In a tragic manner; in a manner besitting tragedy. Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.
2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously. TRAGICALNESS. n. f. [from tragic.] Mournfulness; calamitousness. Like bold Phaëton we despite all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the *tragic*ness of the event as in the insolence of the undertaking. Decay of Piety.
- TRAGICOMEDY. n. f. [tragicomédie, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events. On the world's stage, when our applause grows high, For acting here life's tragic-comedy, The lookers-on will say we act not well, Unless the last the former scenes excel. Danbarn.
- The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragic-comedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.
- We have often had tragic-comedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.
- TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [tragicomique, Fr. tragic and comical.] 1. Relating to tragic-comedy. The whole art of the tragic-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay's What d'ye call it.
2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow. TRAG-

TRA

- TRAGICOMICALY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner. Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not, So I was tragicomically got. Brampton.
- TO TRAJECT. v. a. [trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw. The disputes of those assuming confidence, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its apparent kind of ether, they have a different degree of rancor; by which it becomes so fit a medium for the light of all celestial bodies. Grew's Cosm. b. ii.
- If the sun's light be trajected through three or more crystals successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.
- TRAJECT. n. f. [traject, Fr. trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage. What notes and garments he doth give thee, Bring to the traject, to the common ferry, Which trades to Venice. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- TRAJECTION. n. f. [trajectio, Lat.] 1. The act of darting through. Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the ether, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.
2. Emission. The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vii.
- TO TRAIL. v. a. [trailer, Fr.] 1. To hunt by the track. 2. To draw along the ground. Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully: Trail your steel pikes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
- Faintly he staggered through the hissing throng, And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryden.
3. To draw after in a long floating or waving body. What boots the regal circle on his head, That long behind he trails his pompous robe, And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? Pope.
4. [Traile, Dutch.] To draw; to drag. Because they shall not trail me through their streets Like a wild beast, I am content to go. Milton's Agonistes.
- Thrice happy poet, who may trail Thy house about thee like a snail; Or harness'd to a nag, at ease Take journeys in it like a chaise; Or in a boat, whenever thou wilt, Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.
- TO TRAIL. v. n. To be drawn out in length. When his brother saw the red blood trail Adown so fast, and all his armour steeped, For very fumes loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
- Since the flames purf'd the trailing smoke, He knew his boon was granted. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
- From o'er the roof the blaze began to move, And trailing vanish'd in th' Ideal grove. It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide, Then in a steaming fench of sulphur dy'd. Dryden's Æn.
- TRAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter. See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakespeare.
- How cheerfully on the false trail they cry! Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakespeare.
- I do think, or else this brain of mine Hunts not the trail of policy so sure As I have us'd to do, that I have found The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
2. Any thing drawn to length. From thence the fuming trail began to spread, And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Æn.
- When light'ning shoots in glittering trails along: It shines, 'tis true, and glids the gloomy night; But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe's Royal Concert.
3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations. And round about her work she did enspire With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers, Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser's Muirpotamus.
- A sudden star it shot through liquid air, And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.
- TO TRAIN. v. a. [trainer, Fr.] 1. To draw along. In hollow cube he train'd His devilish engine. Milton.

So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,

Since what they act transcend what they command. Denb.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,

As if she could not, or she would not find,

How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.

3. To surmount; to rise above.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howel.

To TRANSCEND. v. n. To climb. Not in use.

To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.

TRANSCENDENCE. n. f. [from transcend].

TRA

2. To remove; to transport.
The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon's H. VII.
He thirty rowling years the crown shall wear,
Then from Lavinium shall the feat transfer. Dryden.
TRANSFIGURATION. n. f. [transfiguration, Fr.]
1. Change of form.
In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or filkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.
It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addis.
Did Raphael's pencil never chuse to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.
To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Lat.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

The nuptial night his outrage strait attends,
The dowl's delir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defecats. Garth.
To TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Lat.] To pierce through.
Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd;
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her foul reproaches spoke. Fa. Qu.
With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton's P. Lest.
Diana's dart
In an unhappy chase transfix'd her heart. Dryden's Homer.
Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Fenton.
To TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.
She demand'd of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every-body. Sidney, b. i.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transform'd to a boy. Shakespeare.
As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd the wift not how. Davies.
